MONA LISA by Leonardo da Vinci

PERHAPS, like so many people, you attribute the Mona Lisa's greatness to her enigmatic expression—to the fact that she "begins to smile," if looked at long enough. Or perhaps you are intrigued because her eyes seem to "follow you around the room" through some technique known only to Leonardo.

Both of these common reactions are discussed in the very first portfolio of the Metropolitan Museum's Seminars in Art as prime examples of the superficial fashion in which most people look at paintings. As the portfolio points out, anyone who admires a painting solely because of its technical competence or the appeal of its subject matter is probably missing what the artist is really trying to convey. A surprising number of otherwise cultivated persons have this blind spot when they stand before a work of art. Either they admire it for the wrong reasons or, if the work is the slightest bit "abstract," they are completely baffled.

Those who suffer from this form of bafflement probably have never had the opportunity to take a good art-appreciation course at a university or attend a clarifying series of lectures at a museum. It was to remedy this situation that the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York devised an unusual program of assisted self-education in the understanding and appreciation of art. The invitation below is made to acquaint you with the thoroughness of the program and its unique method of learning by comparison among great paintings.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art

FOR TWO WEEKS' EXAMINATION

THE FIRST PORTFOLIO OF

ART SEMINARS IN THE HOME

PUBLISHED AND ADMINISTERED BY BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, INC.

THE IDEA: A well-rounded and comprehensive course of lectures in the appreciation of art in which the whole family can participate. You learn by comparison among paintings, utilizing no fewer than 144 large full-color prints of great works. . . . It is like being conducted over a period of time through all the world's museums by experienced lecturers who make clear the fundamental things to look for in whatever paintings you may ever see.

EACH LESSON comes in the form of a portfolio, the core of which is the lecture. But in each portfolio is a pocket containing twelve large full-color reproductions. These pictures are provided separately so that they can be compared side by side with one another to clarify whatever points the lecture aims to illuminate. They have a great advantage, however, over reproductions thrown upon a screen in a lecture hall: They can be more faithful to the originals, can be studied for as long as one wants and can be referred to again and again. Another advantage is that members of a family can "take the course" either separately or simultaneously—husband and wife, parent and teen-age child. Reading each portfolio aloud, and examining the reproductions together, is like visiting a museum together, pointing out to one another something to be appreciated and enjoyed.

HOW THE COURSE OPERATES: One can enroll in this program of twelve portfolios just as one would enroll in a semester course in art at a university—with one important difference: You may, if you wish, drop out of the program at any point without proceeding with the complete course. The portfolios are sent consecutively—one every thirty days—but you may, of course, proceed at whatever rate you choose. The price of each portfolio is $3.75 (plus a small charge for mailing expense). This cost includes the twelve separate full-color reproductions, mat size 9½" by 12½", which come with each portfolio. In most retail stores each set of twelve would sell by itself, in comparable reproductions, for from $6 to $7.50.

INCORPORATING LIVING FOR YOUNG HOMEMAKERS

GRIGSBY

On the cover: Sun-and-sky serenity, one of the nicest welcomes one can give a guest, is the leitmotiv of the hospitable living room in Mr. and Mrs. George K. Garvin's hospitable house in Palm Beach, Fla. The long sofa with angled wings, handily served by small twin tables, faces the swimming pool outside and comfortably seats non-swimmers who prefer to watch other people get their hair wet. Mrs. Garvin calls it her "amphitheatre." For the intervals between swimming, sunning, and spectator sports, there is a game table in one corner, and in the opposite corner a grand piano. And through the open doorway is the inviting sight of the dining room. Like the living room, it is floored in black slate and dressed in the same yellow and aquamarine, a trick of room-to-room continuity that does much to step up visual spaciousness. Interior designers, Falasco-Smith of Palm Beach. For the rest of the house, see page 98.

Sun's fun...but it can starve the living daylights out of your hair!

Now is when you need *condition. The beauty prescription for troubled hair.®

If you check even one of these summer problems, your hair may be starving for condition.*

- ☐ Sun-bleached "beach grass" hair?

- ☐ Hair drained dry by salt water?
- ☐ Limp, over-straightened hair?
- ☐ Spongy, pool-damaged hair?
- ☐ Do you have to hide your hair to look prettier?

Now, in the summer sun, when your hair should be most radiant, its beauty is most threatened. Even hopelessly troubled hair makes a beautiful comeback with condition.* This rich corrective creme is unique. It's not a hairdressing, but actually a beauty pack treatment that works deep down without heat. Makes hair stronger—right away! The Duchess was born with an Oneida spoon in her mouth.

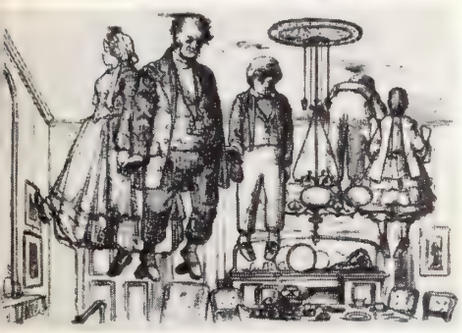
She learned from her marvelous mama about all the things a Duchess should have. Basic things. Like a castle in Spain. An ermine car rug. And Oneida. (And, oh yes—a Duke!)



Stainless by Oneida Silversmiths makes a house of commons a house of lords. For her own private duchy, our Duchess chose "Frostfire" (shown above). And she treats it royally by keeping her 142-piece service for 12 ($199) in the Classic Cabinet (at right).

Whatever your taste in sterling, silverplate or stainless, Oneida Silversmiths most certainly makes something you'll want to own. (And want your daughter to be born with.)

From "The American Heritage Cookbook", reading top to bottom: An 1840 apple paring party was more social than culinary • Stove and dress styles change, but the lure of good food remains • Number one eater Diamond Jim Brady particularly admired Lillian Russell; for a woman, she ate darn well • A century ago, aerated bread was thought to induce weightlessness – or so the jokesters said.

Antiques Questions & Answers

By Louise Ade Boger

With the aid of a magnifying glass I can distinguish the following marks on my solid silver coffeepot: a salamander at the top, a plumed fleur-de-lis, and below that the initials "A. L." I inherited it from my French grandfather. How old might it be?

S.H.—Oak Park, Ill.

FRENCH COFFEEPOT

According to the hallmark, your coffeepot was made in Paris in the eighteenth century possibly by Alexis Loir, a silversmith who was active around 1733.

AMERICAN SETTING

My mother received these table settings as a wedding present in 1895. The marks are: a boar's head, Waldo, initials HE. It appears to be gold. Any information will be appreciated.

G.N.M.—Xenia, Ohio

Your flatware was made by the Waldo Foundry of Bridgeport, Conn., which was founded in 1894 and closed in 1905. According to their trademark, their specialty was "aluminum-gold flat and tableware."

What can you tell me about my grandmother's mahogany table, which was a wedding present in 1850 and was said to have come originally from England. It has carved acanthus leaves on the base of the pedestal.

H.M.B.—Bala-Cynwyd, Pa.

MAHOGANY TILT-TOP TABLE

Your tilt-top table supported on a turned pedestal with quadruped base is in the late Empire style. The details of the design indicate it was made in America and probably dates between 1840 and 1850.

SNAP-LID JUG

I'd appreciate any information you can give me on this pitcher I inherited, or on its mark. The design is chocolate brown on white, and the pewter snap-up lid is stamped "Atkins Brothers—Sheffield."

S.L.S.—Bloomington, Minn.

The snap-lid is not pewter, but the English plated silver that was made by Atkins Brothers. The diamond-shaped mark shows that the design was registered at the British Patent Office, April 25, 1863.

Notes for July gardeners

Summer's routines are seldom glamorous, but they do add to the total pleasure of gardening

First weekend

Let there be moonlight. There are many ways to illuminate gardens at night, many of them garish. No law says that landscapes cannot be lighted like circus acts, but then again, no one is under any compulsion to buck the natural laws of diurnal illumination. In fact, a good many gardeners (non-gardeners, too) feel that darkness is one of the chief charms of the outdoors, and that even a flaring match can, at the wrong moment, be a spectacular desecration. Nobody, however, knocks moonlight. And the practical simulation of at least some of moonlight's best effects is well within the competence of the average handyman working on the average to better-than-average home landscape.

There are at least two keys to success with fake moonlight: one is the use of relatively low-intensity light directed through blue filters; the other is the placement of all light projectors up among the tree branches (or similar elevated positions where the light source can be reasonably camouflaged without too much loss of light). For some reason or other, a variety of light sources from several fixtures does not lead to a confusion of shadows; rather, the extra diffusion of light suggests an improved type of moonlight. While professional installations involving special display fixtures and conduit at standard house voltage are probably more effective in the very long run (say ten years or so), the newer low-voltage kits, supplying 12-volt current through transformers to half-a-dozen weatherproof lights dispense an equally good grade of moonlight on a do-it-yourself basis. These outfits, which may also be installed at ground level, vary in quality and, as you might expect, price—the best ones costing just under $100. If you are at ease on a ladder (or have prehensile toes), you can do all the installation yourself in perfect safety, even connecting and moving wires and fixtures at night while the transformer current is on and the lights lighted.

Second weekend

Why spray? In general, gardeners probably do too much spraying, or at least they tend to do it at the wrong times. The veterans at the spray nozzle have learned that a quick burst of the right pesticide at the right time is worth a bucketful when the need is not present. And the need is the pest. So, to proud owners of a fine boxwood hedge or a handsome holly, we urge a careful look to see whether the leaf miners that especially afflict these two plants are still at work—or at work again. If you did not spray in May to control these pests, they are almost surely at work again and the time is now. H&G does not hold with indiscriminate spraying of heavy masses of foliage on a routine Saturday morning basis. Especially with the most modern insecticides, sharpshooting is safest and least troublesome. The best spray for these two pests, in midsummer, is one containing lindane or dimethoate as the active principle. Essentially, both are dangerous poisons, so use as directed. But when you do use them, spray thoroughly, under, into, and on the leaves.

Third weekend

Water spout. Watering hanging baskets in locations where drips are not fatal is always most easily done with a hose rather than a watering can. But use of a hose for overhead work is almost certain to send dribbles of water down a waterer's arm, over his ribs, and

Notes for the Hostess

BY DIANA BRYAN

Both instant and premeditated hospitality are a lot more pleasant for guests and easier for their hosts when said hosts have a permanent plan of organization that can be put into effect at any time. Check lists are indispensable, it seems to me, to ensure the proper supply of necessities and to remind you of the extra touches that increase your hospitality quotient. Lists are also invaluable in helping you operate at maximum efficiency with a seeming minimum of effort. I make lists for my guests, too—lists that spell out the household schedule and idiosyncrasies and include all the vital facts they need to put them at ease, and obviate their fear of bumbling in with foolish questions. It is a case of everyone knowing who, where, when, and what. Most of my lists for myself are divided into three categories—essential, extra, and exotic.

In the guest room

The first check list belongs to the guest room. Over the years, of course, I have gradually equipped it with what seem to me to be the essentials: sturdy mattresses, a supply of bed linens, adequate blankets, pillows (both hard and soft), a good reading lamp, comfortable chair, and draft-free ventilation. More recently, I've managed to replace some of the essentials with prettier versions that pamper the eye as well as the person—striped and flounced sheets, comforter, blanket cover, pillow sham—all in coordinated colors plus a trousseau of matching pillows to suit every need: small French or baby pillow, neck roll, elbow pillow, triangular reading bolster, and, just in case, a foam-rubber pillow for guests with allergies. (I've found that E. Braun at 717 Madison Avenue in New York makes some of these pillows, covered in lighthearted prints or handsome embroideries, and provides matching towels and mats for the guest bathroom as well.)

Most of these things remain sacrosanct to this particular room and its visiting occupants. But when we are between guests, some of the room's other trappings are often borrowed by a member of the family (it could be me) who has a way of forgetting to put them back. Which is where my check list comes in. It includes: folding bedboard, heating pad, electric sheet or blanket, extension cord, alarm clock, eye shield, sewing kit, ice water carafe, mint candies, a few well-chosen books, magazines, and the daily papers, writing paper, pen, pencils, stamps, fresh flowers, a radio, and guest cards to the club. Some day—or one by one as I can stretch the budget to include them—I would like to add a means for serving hot drinks, a small bar, a portable TV set (to be accompanied by current program listings), a hair dryer, and some provision for pressing traveler's wrinkled clothes.

In the guest room mirror frame I keep permanently posted one of the lists for guests. It is comprised of our telephone number, our address complete with zip code, phone numbers of the fire and police departments, our doctor, and a good garage. I also include the hours of church services and how to get to them, and the usual hours for family breakfast, lunch, and dinner. A comprehensive bus and train schedule is on hand in the guest room, too, as are state and area maps for motoring friends.

In the guest house

When guests are put up in the guest house, I find it advisable to give them another kind of list—really more of a chart—showing where the thermostat is and how to operate it, and the location of electrical outlets together with a description of any of the idiosyncrasies of light switches, stove, or refrigerator, plus instructions on how to open and close windows and doors if there is anything unusual about them. If the guests are to get their own breakfast. I have a list that reminds me to be sure the guest house kitchen is stocked with eggs, milk, butter, cereal, bread, coffee, sugar, jam, and juice. Extras often include coffee cake, fresh fruit, bacon. Exotic fare would consist of small steaks or lamb chops, homemade bread, milk punch, ice cold fresh peach or pineapple juice, sweet butter.

There are times when we have to put guests up in a hotel or motel and I try to see that they are made as comfortable there as if they were in my own house. A few hours before they are due, I drive over with a basket of personal comforts and goodies. Essentials include a welcome note, flowers, the newspapers, and other reading matter, cigarettes, and a timetable of our scheduled plans as well as maps of how to get to our house and any other place the guests may have to find for themselves. The extras: something salty to nibble on, fruit and candy, and a small supply of good stationery. Depending on the people and the occasion, I may also add bar supplies, a bottle of iced champagne, caviar and melba toast, olives, cheese and crackers, and perhaps some playing cards.

Many people have swimming pools today, but not all have pool houses with accommodations for changing. Even so, arrangements may be made so that swimmers can change in comfort. As a pool owner, I find it essential to have extra oversize bath towels, bathing caps, and a place for hanging wet bathing suits. I also try to keep on hand a supply of clean combs, suntan lotion, bath powder, sunglasses, plastic bags for suits that must be taken home before they are dry. Exotic additions for visiting swimmers might well include terrycloth robes, extra suits, sun hats, a hair dryer, miniature lipsticks, and body friction lotion.

In addition to housing guests, there is also the more frequent pleasure of feeding them—whether invited in advance or unexpected. I keep a permanent pantry list against all eventualities and check off each item as it is used, so I'll know what must be replaced. The essentials are: a large supply of canned gourmet soups, canned seafood, tinned meat (corned beef, tongue, chicken, ham), artichoke hearts, olives, pickles, mushrooms, tinned sliced tomatoes, biscuit mixes, flavored rices, out-of-the-ordinary pasta, and bottled or canned sauces and gravies. I see to it that there are also plenty of canned or dried fruits and some special tinned sweet biscuits or wafers. With such standbys, you can always whip up an interesting meal. The extras depend upon individual taste, but might well consist of wild rice, green noodles, wheat pilaf, canned fancy vegetables (Belgian baby carrots, pickled beets, vine leaves, etc.), pastry shells, nuts, spreads, unusual crackers. On my exotic shelf I like to have hearts of palm, dried mushroom, caviar, pâté, smoked delicacies, pappadums, odd foods with a foreign flavor to add a fiesta touch.

For me, the freezer is also part of my pantry, and it is a godsend to have it stocked with a supply of prepared fancy rolls, herbed breads, frozen soufflé bases, cooked casseroles, cakes, and other desserts which we make in duplicate whenever we have them for a family meal.

Out prettiest list is a daintily hand-lettered one, neatly framed and hung over the library telephone, where it is most apt to be needed. It includes our telephone number, area code, any vital information a visitor may need if he or she should have to make a telephone call, send directions, or need assistance.

thence where gravity dictates. Even on a warm summer's day, such trickles may be trying. So, by all means invest about $3 in an aluminum wand that screws to the hose and delivers a reasonably dripless stream through the crook-neck outlet. (Since the outlet is threaded, fine spray and misting nozzles may be attached as needed.) With an extension tube such as this, an average-size adult can deliver a gentle stream to an 8-foot-high container without recourse to a stepladder or running the risk of getting a drenching. It goes without saying that what is good for hanging baskets under a tree or a pergola is equally good for the plants hanging from the sash bars of a greenhouse.

As a further thought: hose watering (with or without the dripless watering tube) makes possible the easy application of dilute fertilizer by means of the syphon-and-bucket method. (An attachment between faucet and hose draws dilute fertilizer from a prepared bucket at a fixed rate—often 20 to 1.)

Book notes. The special value of such a luxuriant volume as Flower Arrangements in Stately Homes (Arco, $9) lies in the judgments that author Julia Clements makes about the ways in which floral decoration enhance the familiar patterns of living. Granted that all the examples are drawn from large estates in the British Isles, still, the lessons to be drawn in regard to good scale, the knowing combination of diverse artifacts, the subtle or dramatic effects to be obtained with flower and plant color are well worth study, and—to any degree practical—a decent grade of low-pressure emulation.

The story of one of America's horticultural wonderlands, Central Park in New York City, makes pleasant and often surprising reading in the small volume, Central Park, a History and a Guide by Henry Hope Reed, Curator of the Park, and Sophia Duckworth (Potter, $5). Central Park has become a political and sociological football of late, so this loving discussion of the park and its creators is especially welcome.

Fourth weekend

East-west crescent. Landscape designers do their best to avoid straight lines, as Nature is also supposed to do. The result often takes the form of curved plant beds. And curved plant beds almost invariably "suffer" unequal amounts and intensities of sunlight in the course of a long summer day. Frequently, indeed, parts of east-west crescents, especially if they are dished toward the south, may remain virtually in full sun all day at one end and in full shade at the other, with a shifting balance in between. The choice of plants that can be decently accommodated in such plantings is usually a compromise. Need it be? Perhaps not. For if full-sun plants are placed at one end and full-shade plants at the other, both being allowed to mingle in the crossover zone, the necessity for accepting compromise will be substantially obviated. In the various portions of the crossover zone, one kind of plant or the other will dominate after a season or two.

One example may be cited: You have a sloping, crescent-shaped embankment, the left end of which (as you face it) faces almost east and the other end almost west. Assuming that the angle of slope is no greater than about two-to-one (22 or 23 degrees), plant clumps of blue fescue grass (Festuca glauca) at the sunny end and Sarcococca hookeriana humilis (it has no common name) at the other. The fescue, although tolerant of some shade, will produce its bluest luxuriance in good sun; the other must have partial shade to do well (it produces both white flowers and blue-black berries, and is evergreen in temperate climates). Both will remain under 15 inches in height; they are pleasantly dissimilar in form and growth habit; what the Sarcococca offers in competitive vigor the fescue makes up for in adaptability and persistence.

HOW TO BEAT THE HIGH COST OF PARTY GIVING

Why, suddenly, has entertaining become such a budget-devastator that cost is often the determining factor in whether or not to give a party? The answer, quite simply, is that the best of everything has become the American way of hospitality and a party less a party than a status contest. The hostess feels, rightly or wrongly, that she is expected to outdo herself, not to mention her equally competitive friends and neighbors, every time she has a few people in for dinner.

The paradox is that the amount you spend or the trouble you take is not necessarily the criterion of a successful party. Most people don't come to your house to be impressed or to be wined and dined as if they were at Maxim's. They come to have fun with other people. "Come over and play" was the phrasing of almost everyone's first invitation as a child. A call to play should be the motivation of every invitation you offer or accept. That is what the current heavy spending for entertaining is trying to substitute for—the feeling of playfulness that has become the moving spirit of the times. Replacing protocol and precedent with free-wheeling fun is one of the newfound freedoms that has done so much to animate our lives today. Parties that successfully capture this feeling most often turn out to be those where ingenuity and inventiveness has stood in for money. This isn't to say that a good party can be run on a frayed shoestring. Any form of entertaining is bound to cost something. But there are ways to cut down the costs in the important areas—decoration, food and drink, and diversion. To get some of the latest thinking on ways to beat the high cost of party giving, H&G polled both experienced hostesses and professionals such as party decorators, caterers, scenic and lighting designers, whose forte is bringing a party in under a set money line and still making it fun.

Prodigal but Pennywise Decoration

Nothing says party faster or creates a festive ambiance quicker than decorations.

"Be lavish with whatever you use," advises Harry Bell, who decorates many of the country's grandest parties. "Whether it's fabric or paper, blossoms or greenery, spotlights or candles—just be sure to use more than enough. If flowers are too dear to have enough to make a showing, try leaves and tie bows on them for color. If leaves are beyond you this time, use balloons—but great masses of balloons. But if a dozen or so balloons is all you can allow for each of several tables, forget that, and mass them all in the center of the room."

Mr. Bell suggests you will get more impact from limited decorations if you place them high. "Once, with just a little money to fill an enormous space, I hung a pair of huge paper flowers over each table. From the doorway the room looked like a dazzling field of color, but more important, it was something that everyone seated at the tables could enjoy. When centerpieces are your principal decorations" he added, "keep them tall and thin." His last bit of advice was to use pattern, pattern everywhere, or keep to just one. The same applies for color.

Here are a few tips from other sources:

- Fresh flowers can wilt in a matter of minutes so don't overlook the pleasantly frank fakery and gaiety of using paper ones.
- You are in luck if your party closely follows a holiday such as Easter or Mother's Day. Most likely you can carry off all your florist's unsold blooms for a fraction of the original price.
- Fruits and vegetables make stunning centerpieces. You can be extravagant with a clear conscience if you make plans to consume them after the party.
- If you can't get balloons locally, you can order them from the nearest city of any size in any number and any color, along with enough helium to inflate them. If you do get them from a local firm, however, you can usually arrange to have one of its men—always cheaper than a decorator—not only inflate them, but arrange them in clusters, shower nets, centerpieces, or maypoles, etc. For a cluster big enough to make an impression, count on approximately 150 standard-sized balloons. A whiz-bang grouping of 1,000 black, white, and clear (for sparkle) constituted almost the whole decoration at one of last year's most talked about parties. But don't plan on balloons for outdoor parties. If the sun strikes them, they may go limp within an hour.

The Tightened Menu

It isn't that food costs gobble up a budget. On the contrary, they often consume a minor portion, even when you have a caterer. It is the hired help for preparation and serving that wrecks your economic guidelines. So if you must have someone in to cook, don't hide him in the kitchen. You can double his value by turning the cooking and serving into front-and-center-stage entertainment. Don White (New York's Telephone Chef), an ex-actor whose zest and imagination keep him a step or two ahead of what's new in party food, suggests serving all manner of crêpes; his wafer-thin pancakes are made on the spot and wrapped around a choice of fillings. "Another thing we do is to have an arrangement of half-a-dozen hibachis, platters of raw, cut-up peppers, meat, and all the things that guests can string on skewers for shish kebab. If the crowd is large, it's best to have a cook, but this arrangement can also be supervised by the host."

Don White also demolishes the myth created by the Victorian concept of overabundant entertaining. "Nobody expects a house to be a fully stocked tavern or a restaurant. Your bar need offer only three simple drinks—Scotch-and, bourbon-and, plus martinis. Apéritif types can be comforted with the dry vermouth. At a large party, a bartender more than pays for himself by not making the mistake that the stiffer the drink the better. Vast arrays of canapés all end up tasting pretty much the same, and the trays become eyesores when picked over. Choose two, or at most three, favorite hors d'oeuvres—and let that be it. The same with food, but whatever you serve, have plenty of it. Better gallons (Continued on page 21) of a succulent ragout than dabs of Beluga.

When we asked Mr. White and some of our other consultants how they felt about punch bowls, all were equally unenthusiastic. "Although it's often not true," added Don White, "they seem so pinch-penny. People like at least a limited choice."

More cost-slashing pointers:

• An unobtrusive means of paring costs is to stick to one liquor plus one food—say, non-vintage blanc de blancs champagne and oysters.

• Here is a way to cope with feeding a large group at a cocktail party that spills over into dinner hours. At their annual Christmas party, Mr. and Mrs. Melinkoff (he is city editor of the San Francisco Chronicle) pass hors d'oeuvres that are really a finger dinner. First come shrimp and quiche Lorraine. Then perhaps steak thumbits with Béarnaise sauce and/or chicken livers wrapped in bacon, or tiny flaky meat turnovers. Last, a dessert such as fresh fruits cut into spearable pieces. All hearty enough so guests feel they have really eaten. All special enough not to be passed up.

• Progressive parties are again fashionable as a way to split up cooking chores or to divide the cocktail and the dinner tasks and costs. They offer the plus of a change of ambiance as well as the entertainment of moving around.

Do-it-yourself Divertissements

Participation can be the best kind of party entertainment. If you build an evening's fun around a theme that will involve your guests, it can be less expensive than the professional entertainment you might have thought to provide. Don't believe costume parties are unpopular. Everyone enjoys them even more than they like to grouse about them. For the host, the price is the same, yet the guests have a chance to be witty and pretty in a different way as well as to provide a substantial part of the decoration.

One of the sprightliest themes reported was a large cocktail bash for which the invitations instructed, "wear something to trade." Guests looked at each other—carefully. "Say, that's a good-looking tie!" "No, this is my favorite, but you can haggle for my topi."

Or the divertissement might be a movie. For a showing at home, most films can be rented for less than $50. We were told of an Aegean party where the guests watched "Zorba the Greek" ($45, Brandon Films) while sipping ouzo. The hostess was foresighted enough to have a couple of bouzouki records around for the line dancing that inevitably erupted.

With Light—Large Effects for Little Cost

According to lighting expert Bob Goldstein, whose Lightworks extravaganzas have explored the further reaches of this decoration-entertainment dimension, "Lighting is vitally important—and the lighting in the average home is actually ugly. The least you can do for guests is to adjust the lights so everyone looks tanned, healthy, and younger. So many people seem to think that anything trickier than pink bulbs makes for some sort of freaky science-fiction setting—all zap! zowie! and supersonic. That's not true; kinetic (constantly in motion) lighting can be elegant as well as exciting."

Some of Bob Goldstein's suggestions can be carried out on a bulb-snatcher's budget:

• If your living room and dining room lights are controlled by a rheostat, they should be adjusted several times during the party to amplify the prevailing mood or inspire a different one.

• At a dancing party, continuous control of the indoor or outdoor lights to coincide with the rhythm will emphasize the music.

• To accompany rock-and-roll sounds, brightly blinking lights can be arranged for inexpensively. All it takes is a 50-cent gadget that you place between the socket and the bulb that makes the light flash intermittently.

• For music in a more romantic vein, colored spotlights can be focused on one of those slowly revolving mirrored balls that can be rented almost anywhere. The entire scene will swirl with fluid grace. The effect will more than offset the few dollars it costs—far cheaper and more interesting than strings of paper lanterns.

Guests—the No-cost Attraction

What many consider the most telling aspect of a party is the only one that costs the hosts nothing. In terms of an old saw: a party is only as good as the guests. But this means different things to different people. To some, it means a sprinkling of celebrities for glamour. Others consider a party drab unless it is deftly decorated with pretty women. Travelers eager (and articulate enough) to talk of their experiences are a tonic for any party. So is the bona fide insider to the latest political intrigue or publishing scandal. The humdrum is no fun, the unexpected is. So if you conceive a party in playfulness and carry it out in gaiety, you will have gone a long way toward reversing the high cost of party giving.

MONTEREY PENINSULA

BY HUGH JOHNSON

EDITOR'S NOTE: British writer Hugh Johnson, while on a wine-sampling trip in California for H&G, explored the Monterey Peninsula, a part of the U. S. coast few Europeans see, and was enchanted by its unfamiliar Spanish Colonial architecture and untrammeled charm.

In California, from Monterey to Big Sur Hot Springs, there is a stretch of land a little less than fifty miles long that I find one of the most enthralling, unpredictable drives in America. To the north, 125 miles away, is San Francisco; to the south, 345 miles, is Los Angeles, and here, between them, is a land created for joy.

The Monterey Peninsula is steeped in the history of pioneer America. Its main city, also called Monterey, was the first city in California, and when under Spanish rule, it was the civil and military capital. The peninsula was a Spanish colony for fifty years and a part of Mexico for twenty-eight. The flag over the Old Customs House changed five times without a single shot being fired.

This peninsula (the whole area is referred to as the Monterey Peninsula, although this is not quite geographically accurate) has always attracted interesting and unusual people to itself with the sureness and success of a brilliantly run club. The people, in turn, have made it the scene of intense pleasures, curious social experiments, a strong laissez-faire attitude, and some very high living indeed. You can say of this whole stretch of coastline, odd as it sounds, that it has the sophistication of a great city, without the streets.

It was to be expected that the Spanish colonists would love it with a passion—the climate is perfect, the land fertile, the scenery in its natural state (before the great invasion of humanity in recent years) utterly ravishing. Even today, it is only the city of Monterey which has been spoiled by indiscriminate developing; the southern part of the peninsula and the coast down to Big Sur have been saved by intelligent planning—or, in some cases, intelligent inertia.

I was not surprised to find, when I spent some days in the city of Monterey, that because of its Spanish background and its citizens' respect for their heritage, there are still many of the simple, graceful adobe houses of the early years scattered around the center of the town. The Indians had used adobe for centuries and had shown the Spaniards how to mix mud with straw, cut it into blocks, and leave it to dry in the sun. Later, a more sophisticated and more durable method was developed by baking the blocks in a kiln. The houses are mostly boxes with walls painted white, and adorned with a delicate veranda railing —not a flamboyant affair, New Orleans style, but a single row of turned pilasters, like an old-fashioned child's cot. Wisteria and roses ramble up the white posts onto the roofs.

The basic Spanish Colonial style was modified by seafarers from New England and resulted in the famous "Monterey" style of architecture of which the Larkin house on the corner of Jefferson Street and Calle Principal, built in the eighteen thirties, is considered the prototype. It is a two-storied, adobe house with a hip roof and a railed balcony over the veranda. We found a tour of it most rewarding, but it is not the only interesting adobe house to be seen. We were fascinated with the Old Customs House (the oldest government building in California) and the Pacific Building, which has a balcony on all four sides. While walking around Monterey, we also enjoyed the Casa Soberanes, the Casa Pachenco on Abrego and Webster Streets, and the adobe opposite the Casa Abrego. The former is still a private residence and the other two are now private clubs for men and women. Directly across the street from the women's club, I found a delightful restaurant called Ring's, where you sit at rough outdoor tables in a setting of flowers and trees. Across from the restaurant is one of the outstanding places to shop for imaginative gifts and furnishings—Casa Mañana, run by a former head of the California School of Fine Arts in San Francisco, Joseph Danysh, and his wife, Beth.

That the two dozen or so old houses remaining fail to create an old-town atmosphere is due, I suppose, to the fact that they are scattered. The heart of Monterey is like the center of any other American city—with a few more showplaces. By way of encouraging visitors to seek out the old, the city has painted a red line along its streets as a route for tourists. To view Monterey at its best, you should follow this line and use every fiber of your imagination to re-create the once green and pleasant settlement. Plans are afoot to restore the old uncluttered look of the place, and, when done, it will be an important monument for California.

Ambushed by greenery, peaked like a chalet, this Hansel and Gretel house in Carmel is in style of the nineteen twenties named for architect Hugh Comstock, whose backyard doll house, in adult size, became all the rage.

The harbor of Monterey more than makes up for its barren heart. Although Fisherman's Wharf shares the catchpenny tourist attractions common to fishermen's wharves, it adds to them its superb site in the crescent-shaped bay and some really fine seafood restaurants that are perched out over the water—simple in style and concentrated on the serious matter of eating, as such restaurants should be. I found one of the great delights of the place to be sitting and enjoying salmon or abalone or Rex sole, while sea lions did their fishing under our very noses, surging and gliding between the dinghies and the piles of the pier.

Just to seaward of the busy old fishing port lies the strange relic of a fishing boom that came and went: Cannery Row, immortalized by John Steinbeck, who made it probably the best-known part of Monterey. As a writer, I find it encouraging to see how much notice is taken of a writer's connection with a town. Cannery Row now does for Steinbeck what Steinbeck did for Cannery Row. (Robert Louis Stevenson, too, has had more than justice done to his brief residence at Monterey in the autumn of 1879: a whole house has been re-created, room by room, as he knew it.) Cannery Row came to grief with the departure of the sardines. You used to be able to scoop them alive out of the water with your bare hands. Now there are almost none in the area. The short-lived industry has left behind a curious gray alleyway of corrugated-iron buildings. Some are warehouses today.

A section in the middle of the Row has cashed in on its famous name to become yet another gift shop area, complete with a South Seas style restaurant on one of the old wharves. Called The Outrigger, the restaurant is another project of Mark Thomas whose Mark Thomas Inn, set in a six-acre garden with old oaks and pines, is one of Monterey's pleasantest hostelries. Like a lookout, The Outrigger gazes seaward as though on endless watch for the return of the sardines.

Driving westward, past Cannery Row along the north shore of the peninsula, we came to Pacific Grove—the last outpost of the commonplace along this magic shore. Pacific Grove was founded toward the end of the last century as a Methodist retreat. They succeeded in taming a magnificent piece of wild ocean shore with their little gingerbread villas and their promenade. The surf races and bounces toward the rocks and the beds of pink ice plant, like a savage dog on the end of a chain. Just as he seems about to swallow you up, the chain snaps tight and he jerks back helpless.

Sandy beaches define the boundary between Pacific Grove and the estate that occupies the rest of the peninsula's shore. Beyond it, dark woods reach down the fingers of land to the water's edge and cup the foam-filled coves with writhing, red-mossed trunks. The prevailing tree of this promontory, and of Point Lobos to the south, is unique in the world. This is the Monterey cypress, an almost extinct, almost forgotten vagary of tree development—a tree for all weathers, a stunted, blast-gnarled, convoluted gargoyle of a tree, that made me think of an accident in a corkscrew factory.

The huge estate whose woods give such dramatic dignity to this shore is Del Monte Properties, the founder of which, S. F. B. Morse, deserves the credit for most of the conservation of natural beauty on the peninsula. Seeing the danger of the whole coast becoming one great Pacific Grove, Morse bought this estate and started to develop it gradually and rationally, allowing no house to stand out or spoil the view, and keeping the destruction of the trees to the absolute minimum. He built golf courses along the shore and through the forest, and established, at Pebble Beach on the south shore, a big and beautiful hotel, Del Monte Lodge. The famous Seventeen Mile Drive runs along the shore and through the property, giving lovely glimpses of the ocean as it winds in and out of the trees, passing some fine houses and circling back through the hills behind. The hotel, just off the drive itself, is an arc of low white buildings encircling one of the world's loveliest greens, enshadowed by towering pines at the very water's edge.

Del Monte Lodge is the perfect headquarters for seeing the area. Within its own grounds it has a microcosm of the pleasures of the peninsula. Golfers need no telling of its six superlative courses. (On one, you drive your ball right over a piece of the Pacific Ocean.) Inside, the lodge is quiet, old-fashioned, spacious. The food is like that of a good club rather than a great restaurant, but the NEW! NOW! you can have the most beautiful lawn and garden in your neighborhood . . .

Programmed Computer

AUTOMATIC SPRINKLER

World's first . . . and introduced first by Calhoun's. Amazing new water sprinkler. Set just once, and then it automatically waters every inch of your lawn and garden without missing a single blade of grass, waters every flower in your garden . . . every tree and shrub no matter how your lawn or garden is shaped. Yet . . . it never wastes a drop of water on steps, sidewalks, patios, or even lawn furniture.

Plus $1.00 pp. & hdlg.

This is a Sprinkler with a Brain that takes all of the work and guessing out of watering your lawn and garden . . . and does a better job than a full time gardener. Look what it will do for you! You can have a lawn that is thick, lush and green every day of the year regardless of how hot or dry it is. Your flowers will blossom bigger and more often. Your trees and shrubs will have new vitality. Your fruit trees will bear bigger and juicier fruit.

Your Lawn and Garden will be The Envy of Your Friends & Neighbors

You will be proud of your gorgeous lawn and garden. Everyone will wonder what your secret to success is . . . yet you will spend less time, less effort and less money than ever before on your lawn maintenance. This is all possible with our PROGRAMMED COMPUTER LAWN SPRINKLER, the sprinkler with a brain, because the secret to a beautiful lawn is proper sprinkling. All the chemicals, seeds and mowers in the world won't help if you don't water properly.

Science Has Invented A New Type of Lawn Sprinkler that Will Give You the Finest Lawn and Garden You Have Ever Had

You program your sprinkler much like a computer is programmed so that your lawn and garden is perfectly watered. It takes just a few minutes to set the program . . . it's easy to do.

Set It in Just Minutes . . . Forget It . . . Completely Automatic

It even turns itself off when it is done! The sprinkler with a brain! Put the sprinkler in the middle of your lawn. Follow the simple instructions and set the 16 black knobs on top of the sprinkler. Just adjusting the knobs sets the amazing "computer brain" mechanism inside this round 10" sprinkler. This almost unbelievable mechanism rotates the three gear driven nozzles concealed inside the sprinkler so they water the exact area you have programmed . . . or even skip a spot like your steps or lawn furniture. Up and back nozzles jet out the water accurately to reach every spot with the water low and hugging the ground. After the sprinkler has completely watered your lawn and garden for you IT SHUTS ITSELF OFF!

The Sprinkler Itself Never Moves

. . . just the three hidden nozzles rotate within it. Best yet . . . you don't have to lift a finger . . . it sprinkles a vast area reaching out as far as 40 ft. on each side . . . so it will automatically cover a 80 ft. lot. Saturates up to 5,000 sq. ft. of any possible shape.

Read What A User Said—". . . truly amazing! This is the ultimate in lawn sprinklers. What more can anyone ever expect a sprinkler to do?"

—Mr. S. Stillman

Try It Yourself for One Month without Risking A Penny

You have nothing to lose. Try this amazing new sprinkler for one full month. If it doesn't do everything we say it will . . . and even more, return it for a full refund.

Computer Programmed Sprinkler—Heavy duty construction built to last for years by one of America's leading manufacturers of sprinklers for golf courses.

HOW TO DELIGHT YOUR GUESTS

Hospitality is an attitude that rings through your voice and shines through your smile. But it shows up in other ways, too. Some are as concrete as the easy-to-read sign that tells people where you live. Some are as subtle as the way you get across to an overnight guest that he is free to rise at dawn or sleep until noon. Hospitality is the cool drink you give a weary caller on a hot day, but on a cold day it may be the efficient disposition you make of his boots and overcoat. Hospitality is being smart enough to leave certain guests to their own devices—as well as the cool with which you issue spur-of-the-moment invitations: "please stay for" or "do come home with us." Indispensable to all hospitality is a relaxed atmosphere—the kind that comes from thoughtful planning, frequent practice, and a self-confident valuation of what you have and what you enjoy yourself. To be truly hospitable is to share with others your own delight in living.

A TALENT FOR LIVING

By Anne Stagg

An extraordinary house where HOSPITALITY HAPPENS

When you visit the William Talbots, you are welcomed with refreshing naturalness. Straightforwardly simple, enormously warm, full of zest, the Talbots are always themselves. Their naturalness springs from their confidence and obvious joy in their individual way of life—a talent for living that includes a heart-warming aptitude for making visitors feel at home. In this unaffected ambiance, you feel instantly at ease.

You first sight their house, through its fringe of trees, across a gentle, rolling landscape of meadows and woods outside Washington, Conn. When the Talbots acquired the building sixteen years ago, it was a barn, and they still keep it painted the traditional New England barn red. The summer they moved in, they and their three children (a fourth has been born since) lived all together in the attic hayloft, the only halfway habitable space in the barn. Gradually, over the subsequent years, they carved out their home. Horse stalls became bedrooms, kitchen and bathrooms were installed, and, eventually, when they needed more space, they added a wing at each end. One wing is an immense two-story studio for William Talbot, who is a sculptor.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GRIGSBY

When you reach the house, your first greeting is apt to be from some member of the Talbots' lively menagerie of pets—most likely from the three white ducks who break into excited gabbling down at the pond. Then the front door opens and you are warmly welcomed by the Talbots themselves —Mrs. Talbot wearing a dress of wonderfully pungent hues that reflects her passionate love of color; William Talbot, a towering, blue-eyed, sandy-haired man with a mustache, in light blue jeans and a jersey.

Inside, the Talbot house is a kaleidoscope of sights, scents, sounds. The air is fragrant with the mingled aromas of baking bread, a beef ragout bubbling on the stove, a profusion of freshly cut flowers and growing plants. A canary sings in (Continued) the kitchen. Paintbox colors fill each room —reds, blues, yellows, making gay splashes against the old barn walls of dark-stained wood or whitewashed concrete block. The Talbots' engaging freedom for bringing together the objects they like, regardless of whether traditionally they go together or not, has led them to furnish their living room with furniture of rattan, of leather, of canvas (there is even a bizarre chair carved out of a tree trunk, which Mr. Talbot found, half-hewn, in a Philadelphia antique shop, brought home, and finished off himself), has prompted them to cover chairs and sofas with Mexican blankets, cow skins, fur robes, and to hang a rug from Crete on the wall next to an abstract painting.

From the moment you enter the Talbot house, however, your eye is tantalized and enticed by the sight of dense, exotic greenery beyond the kitchen. Impelled towards this irresistible leafiness, you step into another world: a great, lofty, glass-roofed greenhouse, jungle-thick, and headily perfumed with an unbelievable variety of exotic plants and trees. Standing in pots and tubs on the gravel ground or hanging in pots and baskets from the rafters are oleanders, acacias, jasmine, cosmos, roses, ferns, rubber plants, bamboo, a banana palm (which does sometimes bear bananas), a pomegranate, a loquat, eucalyptus, a fig tree, lemon and orange (Continued on page 70)

Dinner and lunch in the greenhouse are served under a bower of straw matting, RIGHT, and BELOW, supported by a simple wood frame. Table is made of flagstones mounted on iron bases. Once a week, plants are watered, and gravel floor and one wall of moss-covered stones, part of old barn foundation, are sprayed to create humidity, control dust.

The Talbots' hospitable kitchen opens wide to the living room because Mrs. Talbot hates to be shut off from guests or family while cooking. Dinner guests usually settle around large round table for cocktails before going into greenhouse for dinner; the family eats breakfast at that table, too. Hanging bunches of herbs come from garden, as do cabbage, squash, tomatoes, lettuce, and, if the Talbots beat the raccoons, corn.

HOSPITALITY HAPPENS

At night, William Talbot's ingeniously placed spotlights create shafts of soft light that halo his glowing-eyed sculptures and make the feathery foliage look mysterious. Wooden bench against wall was designed by architect Richard Henry Dana for a house he did for Mrs. Talbot's great-aunt. In hot weather, sides of glass roof of greenhouse can be raised like wings.

Sunday brunch is usually served in the sun-splashed greenhouse on a low table made from slab of polished granite set on hunks of tree trunk. Plain wooden garden chairs are brightened with Mexican wool blankets. Housekeeping in the greenhouse is blissfully easy: every surface can be wiped and when gravel floor looks unkempt, it is simply raked smooth.

Mrs. Talbot makes waffles for Sunday brunch in antique iron.

Before dinner, guests like to sit around kitchen with drinks.

Even when the Talbots do g large parties, they keep th simple. Several times a y they have a big open hou inviting anywhere from f to 100 friends for drinks and sandwiches. for a buffet supper. Specifically for th buffets, the Talbots have a stock of 100 fo and 100 spoons which they bought at a r taurant supply store, and two cases of sm glasses because Mr. Talbot refuses to ser wine in paper cups. The food, however, served on paper plates—decorative on printed with a willowware pattern. If t dish is runny, Mrs. Talbot places Mexic pottery plates under the paper ones. Favo ite menus for the Talbot buffets are heart trees. Four pet snow-white doves also inhabit the greenhouse, swooping freely, filling the air with their cooing and rustling.

Largely William Talbot's creation. the greenhouse was born four years ago after the Talbots returned from a holiday in Antigua. "We thought it would be so much better to create our own tropics right here. Then we could enjoy it the year-round without the bother of leaving home." Unsurprisingly, the greenhouse has become the most popular room in the house with family and visitors alike. In glade-like clearings there are chairs and tables for meals, for drinks, or simply for dreaming.

Griddles for cooking hamburgers in fireplace were made by Mr. Talbot.

savory casseroles of beef or chicken, or lasagna, followed by plenty of salad, fresh bread, and red wine served from tall green glass carafes. Proud of being independent, Mrs. Talbot prepares for their parties without any outside help.

"We keep saying we're going to hire someone to serve drinks and help at parties," she says, "but we always end up hiring one of our children." Fortunately, the children thoroughly enjoy being recruited, and each has a specialty: eleven-year-old Peter makes salads and arranges the big, artistic bowls of fruit; sixteen-year-old John makes succulent omelettes; eighteen-year-old Gussie and nineteen-year-old Connie make "gooey desserts." Now and then, the Talbots give a dancing party in the studio, or they rent old films, such as the Marx Brothers, to show to friends after dinner.

Sunday noon, when sun floods greenhouse, brunch becomes a party.

Making things is a favorite occupation of the entire Talbot household. When William Talbot isn't working on one of his free-form concrete or stained-glass sculptures, or having to go off to New York (currently, he is the busy president of the Sculptors' Guild), he loves to make all sorts of household objects. All the candleholders and sconces in the greenhouse he made by cutting up sheets of galvanized metal that were to be used for flashing (the builder was horrified). Out of welding rods, he made a pair of decorative griddles for toast and hamburgers. He made spotlight fixtures for the kitchen ceiling corners by punching out the bottoms of old Medaglia d'Oro coffee cans—and special glareless lights for the greenhouse by constructing cones out of the sheet metal he uses as reinforcement for his concrete sculptures.

The Talbots' vitality and joy are constant forces in their lives. Beauty abounds in their house, but it is never contrived; like their hospitality, it simply happens.

ONE BIG SWITCH-AROUND ROOM

In Texas, where hospitality is an open-armed gesture, Mr. and Mrs. John Burton Rogers recently added to their guest-roomless house a wing that is almost a house in itself. Designed by architect Downing Allison Thomas, the new "library," as it is understatedly called, is really a suite consisting of a 30-foot-square, 12-foot-high bookroom that branches off into two alcoves, one for a bar, the other for music equipment. Beyond alcoves are a compartmented bath, a huge guest closet, an exercise room. Nowhere is there any evidence that the library can be used as a bedroom, only when a section of the U-shaped sofa is pulled out to become a 7-by-7-foot bed does the room say good night, sleep well.

The Rogers' house is not large (or wasn't), and the annex was added to provide not only guest space, but a second living room where they could enjoy every type of modern entertainment facility. Four walls of shelves hold the books there was never room for before. Four speakers—one in each corner of the bookshelf square—guarantee a listening pleasure approaching that of a good symphony hall, but the rest of the stereo equipment with its attendant battery of records and tapes is tucked neatly out of sight. Because Mrs. Rogers dislikes machinery in the open, a big color television screen in one wall is concealed behind a swing-out panel of bookshelves. Wholly visible, however, is the weather information panel in another wall—the Rogers are great tappers of barometers. They also love quiet, which is reliably assured by an acoustical ceiling, wall-to-wall carpeting, double, insulated walls, and the double doors that close off the library from the rest of the house. An inner pair slides back into wall pockets, revealing a second pair that swings open to the living room. With the doors closed, the air space between them becomes an effective sound barrier.

From the double doors, three steps lead down to a conversation pit which is surrounded on three sides by a carpeted platform. This broad ledge not only works as a book-browsing catwalk, but affords hiding space for the slide-out king-size bed and a series of sunken, trap-doored cabinets behind the sofa. In them are housed a whole bag of tricks: an intercom system, a switch for lowering or raising a movie screen recessed in the ceiling, outlets for the bed's electric blankets, dials for controlling the room's wall-washing lights and recessed downlights, dials to control the stereo sound, and a plug-in telephone with an amplifying attachment for group conversations. Also sunk in the platform are two trap-door-topped wells—one for pillows and bed linen, the other for the movie projector and film storage. Completely air-conditioned, the room is heated by radiant coils in the floor, plus a forced and filtered air system around the perimeter.

Yet, for all its intricate engineering, the room is a pretty one. Mrs. Rogers, who was the interior designer, loves pale beige, and has used it prodigally. The white oak woodwork is tinted the exact color of the carpeting and linen velvet upholstery. The only bright hues are supplied by the books and by the ladies' dresses during the entertaining hours that might begin with pre-luncheon cocktails and end at bedtime.

The library-guest room wing is connected to the rest of the house through double doors made by enlarging a window in the living room. From outdoors, you enter in a less conventional manner, via a little platform bridge over the sunken tub in the bathroom. The platform under the window across the room from the double doors is reached by a ladder and performs two functions: it is a reading roost for anyone who wants a lot of sunlight, and a little stage for impromptu party performances—recitations, solo dancing. Numbers and letters on the plan indicate location of details on the next two pages.

Comforts—physical and esthetic

At one end of the guest bathroom (see plan, preceding page) is a sunken tub, 1, warmed by radiant heating coils. Two shower heads take care of vari-sized guests. Non-showerers, by lifting out the little bridge to the exterior door, can enjoy a water massage in the tub which is equipped with a mechanism that turns a bath into a delightful eddy. Three steps up is the bathroom proper, 2, paved in black slate. In a cabinet at one end of the counter, male guests find an electric shaver and shaving mirror. Ladies faces are well-lighted by an electric make-up mirror on a pull-out shelf. Next door is the exercise room, 3, a tiny gym with an exercising bicycle and a wonderful vibrating chaise.

Bar alcove, 4, contains sink with marble counter, refrigerator in cabinet, a mixing shelf, and pertinent storage.

Two pairs of double doors, 7, between living room and library, ensure quiet by virtue of air space between them.

Platform, 5, opposite double doors, is ascended by pull-out ladder. At night, Roman blind covers window.

In weather panel, 8: a barometer, wind direction and speed indicators, an outdoor temperature recorder.

Library ladder, 6, hooks on shelves, is kept in bar. Windows can be masked with shutters that recess into walls.

Carpeted, trap-doored well, 9, sunk in platform behind sofa, holds pillows and linen for the pull-out guest bed.

The comforts of HOME--AND MORE

Imagination is the greatest asset host and hostess can be blessed with. The imagination to think up delightful surprises—an offbeat place to give a party or a charming spot for entertaining one friend for lunch. The imagination to realize that although you may enjoy active entertainment, someone else's idea of sheer bliss is to be left all alone with a good book. And above all, the imagination to recall all the little things that have made, or spoiled, your fun when you were guest.

How to be INHOSPITABL

Host and guests are utterly different species. Often their points of view are parallel lines that never meet, and occasionally, due to faulty communication, it seems they haven't even a language in common. Today the host/guest slips in and out of his role so incessantly—host at noon, guest at night—that he not only has no time to polish up his technique as perfect host or paragon guest, but as host he strangely forgets to remember the pangs he felt as guest. For make no mistake about it, in entertaining, the spiritual responsibility can never be a fifty-fifty split. The host, though he may have an I-am-a-slave-to-my-guests syndrome, is in full charge, and the guest is in bondage. It is not a completely infallible thesis, but almost, that a good host breeds good guests and a flawed host, cranky ones. Consider the infinite variety of hosts, inhospitable in spite of themselves, as seen through the eyes of their guests-caught-in-amber.

It is dinner for eight and at eight. And the host, who has never won a Pulitzer prize for promptness himself, has worked up a hostility toward the last straggler. He greets his tardy guest with a fixed smile of false friendship, brushes aside his apologies, and reminds him, "I'm sure you'll understand that you'll just have to forget that second martini."

●●●●●● The guest immediately recognizes this host as a Penalty Imposer and has a fantasy of the graceful one who believes his excuses and catches him up with the rest of the crowd by instantly producing the largest, iciest double in the world.

Another host can't bear to see his guests stand idly by while he works his fingers to the bone, so he has sold himself the idea that they will feel more wanted if they are allowed to share in the humble household tasks all weekend. No sooner have they set foot then they are dispensed to the four corners of the place. James to prune the apple trees, Patrick to shingle the tool-house roof, Lily to pick raspberries. Ivor, who is in the theatre, is allowed to drive a carload to the village dump because he should not miss the dramatic sight: a Gustave Doré engraving of the Last Judgment—flames biting the air, acrid smoke whirling, scavenger gulls screaming overhead. Beautiful!

●●●●●● Meanwhile, down at the briar patch, Lily, who has never considered work particularly ennobling and is expecting to die on the spot from sunstroke, is composing her last will and testament, cutting off her hosts and retracting every drop of Château Lafitte Rothschild '59 she has brought as a house present. In the codicil, she has instructed them to look up two simple words in the Concise Oxford Dictionary: selfish, adj., deficient in consideration for others, alive chiefly to personal profits or pleasure, activated by self interest; and entertain, v.t., amuse, occupy agreeably. She thinks of it as her final contribution toward eliminating the language barrier between host and guest.

"The Merrythoughts are on with one of their famous bashes tonight," the Indian-giver hostess explains, "but I told them that you had come for a rest." The Antique Show where she found the Lowestoft is too tiring a drive. And at supper she confides, "We might have gone down to the cove for lobster, but scrambled eggs here seemed cozier."

...ithout really trying

BY REBECCA WARFIELD

There is a word called "showplace" that hasn't been thoroughly enough investigated. Whom do you show it to, and why? Is it enough of a treat to view the glorious house and grounds? Some hosts seem to think so. These are the "Thing Worshippers." It is soon apparent that the reason for the weekend is to have a few souls in to worship with them.

●●●●●● There is nothing to do in this case but recall that old Portuguese proverb, "Visiting always gives pleasure either coming or going."

The mystery hostess cherishes surprises. She wouldn't dream of taking the edge off the fun with details of the dazzling round of parties in store for the weekend. Debonair, she likes to feel that clothes are never any problem.

●●●●●● The guest agrees they are not a problem but more nearly a calamity, as he gropes through the bizarre collection of Just Any Old Things he has been urged to bring along. It is fun to be fooled, but it certainly is more fun to know where you're going and what clothes are going with you.

Here is the failed philosopher. For some time he has been exploring answers to What Went Wrong with the cocktail party. Too formal, he has deducted, and too much trouble for the hosts. So he sends his guests into the lonely crowd with the jolly solution, "The roof's your introduction."

●●●●●● No roof has yet learned that trick, nor how to extricate one guest from the fatal toils of another. Magnanimity and a tireless eye for crises are the hosts' plain duty. Like Francis Bacon, he has given hostages to fortune.

Watch this one warily because he is no ordinary slap-happy host. He has boned up on his craft and read somewhere that it is not enough to inspect the guest room, you have to experience it. So he has spent a night there, proved to himself that it has a reading lamp, and given it top rating. He has also established a psychological climate in which any further requests could only come from a cad.

●●●●●● Actually, the first guest to come along finds that his host has inadvertently walked off with the last hanger in the closet, as well as the water glass from the bathroom. Since the host could use his own, he didn't notice that a bedside clock and a mirror were missing objects. In fact, this thoroughly tested guest room is no more than the average American spare room, so dramatically different from the average European entry where the host does not expect his guest to live just the way he does—but much, much better.

This host is hung up on the theme of unpretentiousness. Unlike the A&P, he wants to make it crystal clear that he hasn't gone to any lengths for this party. His riches have not been squandered on masses of white tulips or branches of apple blossom out of season. Or wasted on candles that scent the room with wild spices. Or thrown away money on shimmering mounds of caviar and impeccable pâtés. No. As he puts it, "My money goes into basic Scotch."

●●●●●● The best guests do not live by liquor alone, but by every drop of atmosphere distilled by the host. As Frederick the Great once observed, "Gaiety makes us Gods" and there is nothing that really swings a party like a whole roomful of gods.

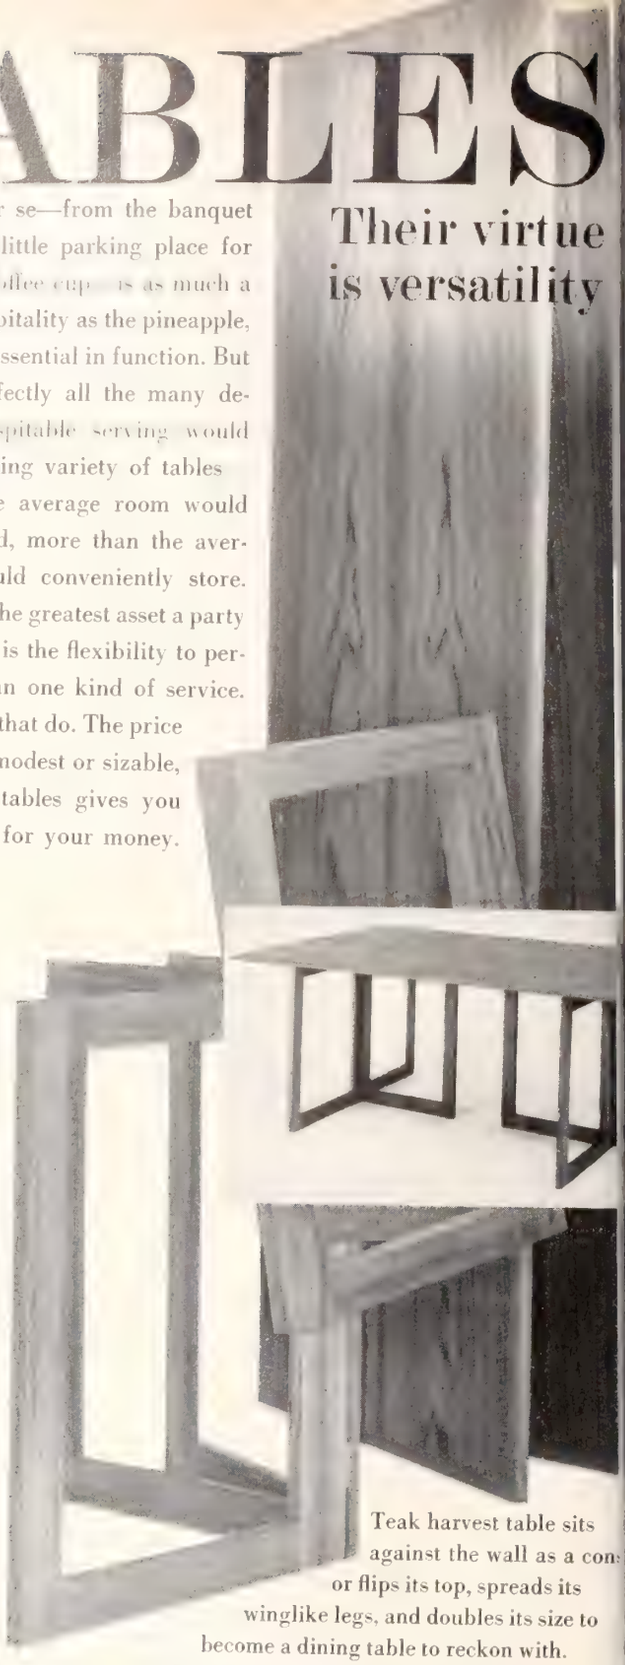
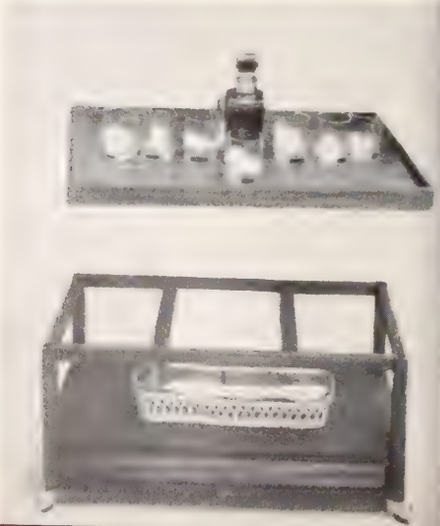
PARTY TABLES

Their virtue is versatility

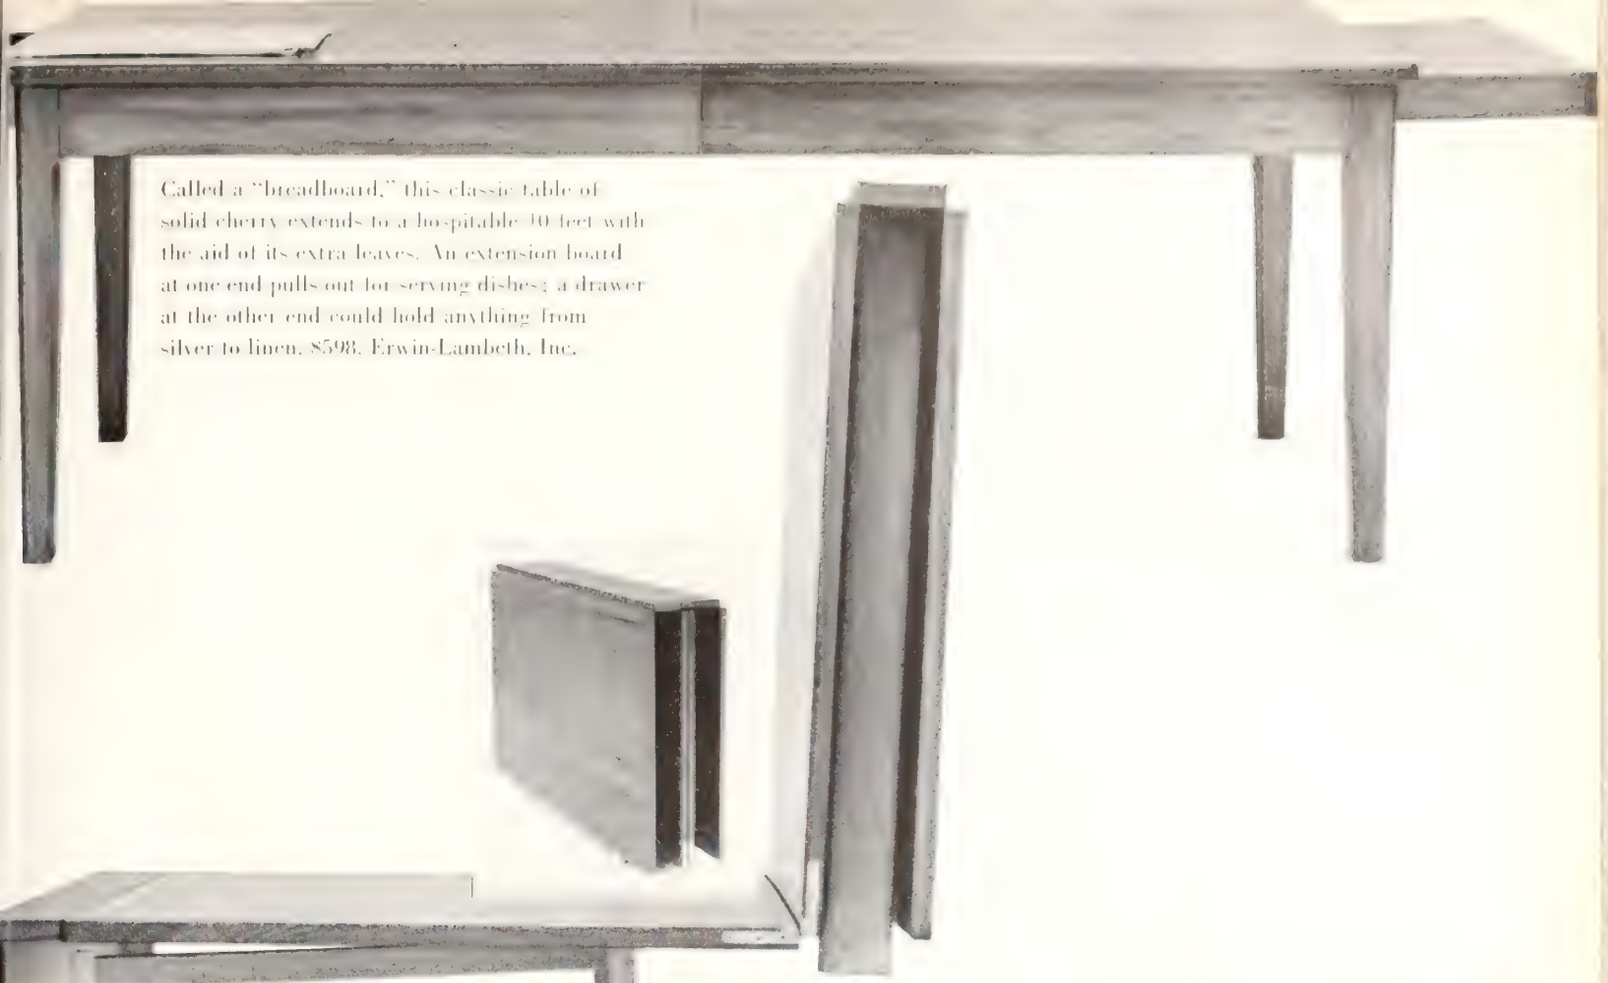


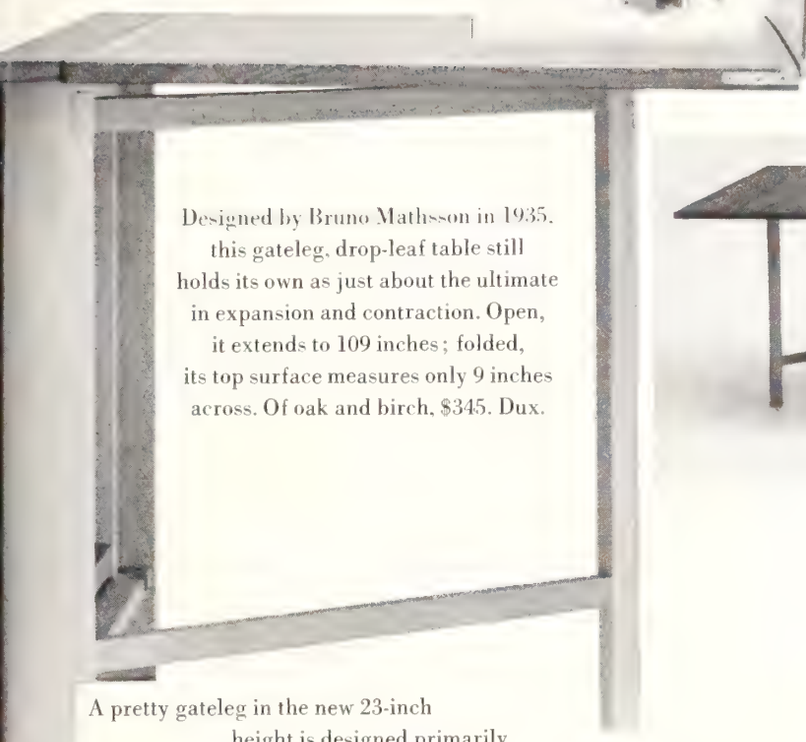
The table, per se—from the banquet board to the little parking place for ashtray and coffee cup—is as much a symbol of hospitality as the pineapple, and far more essential in function. But to satisfy perfectly all the many demands of hospitable serving would take a staggering variety of tables—more than the average room would gracefully hold, more than the average house could conveniently store. Which is why the greatest asset a party table can have is the flexibility to perform more than one kind of service. Here are some that do. The price tags vary, but modest or sizable, each of these tables gives you double service for your money.



Folding "campaign tables" of polished aluminum and black leather with separate glass tops are heaven-sent at cocktail time or for buffet dinners. 20 inches square, $99. Matching, larger table, 34 inches long, $139. Tomlinson of High Point.

Like a jack-in-the-box, this accommodating drop-leaf table rises from cocktail height (17½ inches) to dining height (27½ inches) via an elevator chassis. Of walnut and pecan, 36 by 36 inches with sides up. $227. Milling Road.





Teak harvest table sits against the wall as a con or flips its top, spreads its winglike legs, and doubles its size to become a dining table to reckon with. Open, 72 by 48 inches. $220. Moreddi, Inc.

Caster-borne table of chestnut and walnut runs the gamut from tea to apéritifs. Plastic-laminate tray-top whisks everything away in one trip. 32 inches long. $95. American of Martinsville.

Called a "breadboard," this classic table of solid cherry extends to a hospitable 10 feet with the aid of its extra leaves. An extension board at one end pulls out for serving dishes; a drawer at the other end could hold anything from silver to linen. $598. Erwin-Lambeth, Inc.

Designed by Bruno Mathsson in 1935, this gateleg, drop-leaf table still holds its own as just about the ultimate in expansion and contraction. Open, it extends to 109 inches; folded, its top surface measures only 9 inches across. Of oak and birch, $345. Dux.

A pretty gateleg in the new 23-inch height is designed primarily for tea and gaming, but would make a fine auxiliary table (it seats four) for big dinner parties. Of mahogany and walnut, it is hes square with leaves up. $160. Henredon.

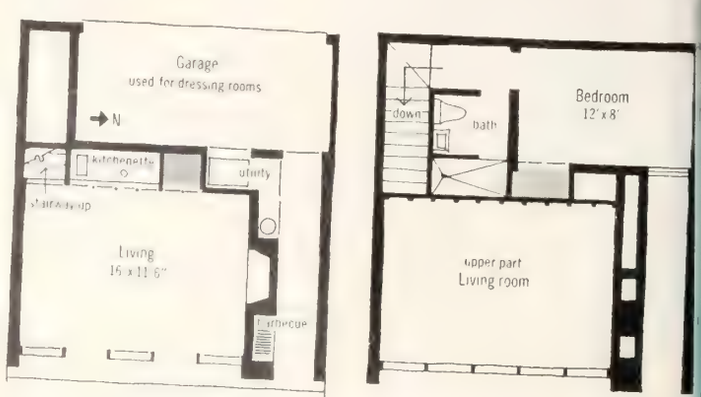
Parsons tables upholstered in zebra-patterned or black vinyl are respectively gay or sleek, and mutually useful—for cocktails, coffee tray, even sitting. 54 or 66 inches long, 15, 25, or 20 inches high. $80, $108.50, $102.50. Thayer Coggin.



MULTIPURPOSE GUEST HOUSES

A well-planned guest house can contribute far more to a family's potential for hospitality than the simple addition of sleeping space for visitors. For one thing, it gives guests a sense of independence and a secluded place to withdraw to for a refreshing half-hour of solitude. A guest house may also double as a beach house or pool house, or like the guest wing on pages 72-77, it may be an all-round center for entertaining—a setting for parties or home theatricals, a place to listen to music, a gallery for the display of an art collection. Here and on the next three pages are two guest houses, very different in style and plan but alike in their versatility. One is in an eastern city, the other on a wild and isolated Pacific beach.

Behind a townhouse, a guest house and poo that add party space

The living room of Mr. and Mrs. C. Woods Vest Jr.'s house in the Georgetown area of Washington, D. C., looks directly across the swimming pool to their guest house—a two-story building with proud side walls of rough white brick taller than the roof and a front wall entirely of glass set in dark brown wood framing. Designed by architect Hugh Newell Jacobsen, the house contains a two-story living room opening to the pool terrace, and, behind that, a garage on the first floor and a guest bedroom and bath on the second. It serves the Vests in many ways: for visiting grandparents, the guest bedroom provides blissful freedom from the clatter of the Vests' three small daughters, and, between visits, the little girls often use the building themselves as a playhouse. But its main hospitable functions are as an extension of the Vests' living room—during big parties, guests wander back and forth—and as a pool dressing room.

On lower floor, LEFT, is a barbecue built into outside of fireplace wall so that it can be tended from passageway between pool court and garage. The latter, which opens to an alley in typical Georgetown fashion, has been fitted with poles and drau curtains, storage benches and wall hooks, to serve as a dressing area for pool. L-shaped utility room for heating and air-conditioning equipment is accessible from garage. Lower floor is slate, upper floor is carpeted with diving board matting—both impervious to dripping swimmers.

Although the floor area is small, the two-story living room, ABOVE, *has a feeling of space and offers a fireplace at one end, a piano at the other. The transparency of the cord-strung chairs and glass-top table keeps the room from looking crowded. The rug, predominantly red, is an antique felt patchwork. One woman wh shares our frankly sentimental approa to flowers confesses that she has a momentary pang whenever it is time t discard them. She finds herself continually pruning away at a big bouquet, salvaging any blooms that ar still fresh, and making new and ever diminishing bouquets, until the origin is just a memory, and all that remains is one almost spent rose, still fragrant and lovely, in a small bowl. Another woman especially loves the ever-changing character of cut flowers. She feels that tulips, for example, grow if possible, more beautiful as they progress from trim, waxen youth to full-blown lushness, their petals wide open and necks drooping like tired swa She loves to mix the grand with the humble (roses and daisies perhaps) to stretch her flower budget and fool the eye by blithely mixing paper blossoms with real ones. And she cherishes every tiny pretty container she comes across, for one day she may have one sweet, most precious flower just that size.

AN INVITING HOUSE

SPARKLING WITH COLOR AND GAIETY

Ideally, before you set about building a house, you gather your way of life into your hands, hold it up to the light, and examine it closely. Then you try to conjure up the kind of envelope that would both enclose and adorn it most fittingly. Only after that should you call in specialists in such matters to translate your vision into walls and windows, floors and doors, fabrics and furnishing, color and light. That is basically what Mr. and Mrs. George K. Garvin did when they built their winter home in Palm Beach, Fla. The Garvins are essentially private people, but their house is always open to their grown sons and daughters and to their friends—from two to two dozen at a clip—and hospitableness is a vital part of their way of life. Their idea of hospitality, which their house bears out, is concerned not so much with any set schedule of entertaining as with a total attitude. They have an instinctive, bred-in-the-bone receptivity to the company of people they like.

Small wonder, then, that the Garvins' house spreads out before you immediately the minute you have entered the painted green-and-white front doors. From the foyer, the house fans out like a bright cornucopia to a spacious terrace and swimming pool. Actually, as Mrs. Garvin says, the living room belongs as much to the terrace and pool as to the house. Along both sides, attendant rooms and services contribute like a river's tributaries to the widening flow of comfort and enjoyment. On the right and left of the living room, the dining room and study are mirror twins. They, too, open to the terrace. The Garvins' bedroom is isolated, by intent, from both pool area and guest suite, which comprises guest room, bath, and bed-sitting room (see Breakfast in your own room, page 84).

Using various combinations of rooms and open spaces, as the opportunities (never exigencies) of hospitality suggest, the Garvins can seat twelve for a leisurely dinner in the lime and (Continued) aquamarine dining room, or twice as many at tables-for-four on the terrace. They do both as easily and with as much pleasure as they enjoy their own breakfast beside the pool.

The Garvins' decorators—Falasco-Smith of Palm Beach—have filled every room with the simplest and sunniest garden colors—greens, yellows, light blue—usually in pairs with black as a unifying tone underfoot and white overhead. (All the colors in the Garvins' bedroom were inspired by the painting over the bed.) Mrs. Garvin's attitude toward color, as toward other aspects of living, is perhaps best described as low pressure. Her preferences are apparent, but she never hits her guests over the head with them.

One of her basic tenets as a hostess is that the less involved she gets with the minutiae of hospitality, the more she will be able to enjoy her guests. Another of her convictions is that (Continued) dinner guests should all be seated in the dining room or all outdoors—never some inside and some out. Kitchens and what goes on there bore her to distraction. She enjoys making menus, but as for cooking, she admits she has had it. A live-out couple takes care of the household in normal situations (up to six house guests are normal), while caterers cope with the infrequent bashes (200 came to the New Year party) that spill over from the house and across the terrace.

Almost as important to the hospitable air of the house are the functions of the furnishings—the mirrored dining room wall that enlarges the room; the huge comfortable crescent couch, served by small tables, all of which you can see on our cover; the swagged curtains that draw across the glass doors when unwanted sun streams over the terrace. Every item that a permanent hospitality alert requires is at hand—silver in ingeniously designed cabinets in the dining room, linens for eight overnight guests and up to twenty-four at meals. Yet all the impedimenta of entertaining seems to melt into the walls until needed—especially into a catchall cabaña-bar off the terrace. And upkeep—thanks to slate or tile floors in most of the rooms and plastic-laminate tops on all possible furniture—is reduced to a few well-timed swipes with a soft cloth.

The master bedroom forms an inner fastness within the larger world of the house itself. At the curtainless windows, wooden shutters with movable louvers provide complete light control. The colors are predominantly yellow accented by pink on the dressing table and linen-covered chairs—the only pink accents in the house.

Almost limitless sociability flows around the pool, and usually through it. Tables for four can be set up in infinite array at the drop of a telephone call. For small dinners, the tables can be placed across pool from living room terrace where guests have cocktails served from cabaña-bar at left. COOL COMFORT

One of the most felicitous ways to say welcome to summer guests is to gre them with a frosty drink—and that means plenty of ice. Cubed ice, cracke ice, crushed ice, any form of ice that will make the drink look as coolly i viting as a mountain stream and help it to stay that way. Ice trays, whic now come with built-in shapes ranging from wedges to hearts, may be use to freeze cubes flavored with Angostura bitters for gin and tonic, straight to mato juice or fruit juices for a Bloody Mary and other mixed drinks. Stor these in plastic bags in the freezer—along with decorative ice cubes tha have citrus-fruit sections, strawberries, cherries, or mint leaves froze in them. You might also keep in the freezer bottles of liquor enshrined i ice, Scandinavian-style (the liquor won't freeze, it just stays bracingly chilly), or a punch bowl sculpted from a block of ice. Frost glasses in the refrigerator by packing them with—or inverting them in—cracked ice And for really icy bliss, frappé fruit-juice cocktails in the blender with crushed ice. DROP-OF-A-HAT INVITATIONS

HOW YOU CAN ALWAYS BE READY WITH A MEAL OR A DRINK

Hospitality is something you can switch on, like your lights, provided that you have the required equipment. In summer, your potential is multiplied, for you can amuse and feed and pamper your friends outdoors as well as indoors, and with summer's leisurely ways you are no more bound by time than you are by space. With a combination of high spirits, smooth planning, and proper gear, you can issue the most delightful invitations—"Right now on this heavenly day . . ." or "Tonight with these same lovely people. . . ." The pleasure of spontaneity is twofold, for the joy of freedom from time's restrictions is one that hosts and guests share equally. Here and on the next five pages are a variety of summer parties ranging from morning to night, poolside to courtside, terrace to dining room, and requiring from a few minutes to one day for the well-prepared hostess' magical pull of the switch. You will find menus and recipes for the first three in the Summer Party Cook Book which starts on page 113.

Come to a poolside picnic starting at sundown"

When dusk and guests arrive for your most elaborate summer party, you and the dinner are ready (see menu for A Picnic at the Beach, page 120), for almost everything has been done in advance. Arranged on their platters are the little cold vegetables to go with the drinks, which are all ready to pour. The shrimps have been marinated, drained, and skewered for the guests to grill on the hibachi whose embers glow in readiness. Cioppino, the West Coast's marvelous seafood stew, has been made up to the last stage, to be finished at serving time (unless you have someone in the kitchen to handle the whole complicated recipe while you stay with your guests). The salad is keeping cool in an ice-filled copper bowl set into a slice of tree trunk—actually a room-warming brazier from Japan—and dessert waits in coconut shell bowls nested in a bed of blossoms.

Some time ago you have set tables-for-four—outdoor tables with slat tops and a shiny white, super-tough epoxy finish. Earlier in the day you arranged the lighting: candles in tall Japanese measuring cups with handles that hook over the latticework supporting the tabbed espaliered shrubs. And for wine bottles, you made daisy drip wreaths on chicken wire coils and kept them in the fridge.

"Why don't all of you stay for supper?"

You've planned a casual supper for your family of four and two weekend guests. But with the six other friends you invited for cocktails, they have formed one of those magically compatible groups you can never achieve deliberately, and you want to keep them together for hours more. Fortunately, you have planned an expandable menu (such as the one on page 120) and you have on hand a supply of pretty trappings that can turn the meal into a party—a cloth that you tape tautly to the buffet table (the multicolored stripes give you a choice of color schemes), paper plates and napkins, little wood candlesticks and a bunch of candles, and a big centerpiece worth of paper flowers on wire stems that you stick into green Styrofoam bases. You wonder what to do about keeping the beer and wine chilled and your eye lights on the big fish steamer. Your teacart is ready to serve both the first and last course; your party is on.

"We'll have brunch in the garden whenever you get here"

You're an experienced short-order cook and you have ways to keep warm things warm and cool things cool, so you can feed your Sunday guests whenever they happen to appear. The short-order dish this time is omelettes with a variety of fillings, cooked outdoors on an electric stove as they were at this party in the garden of Au Bon Goût in Palm Beach. The rest of the food and drink (see page 117, A Garden Breakfast) is set out on tables distributed about the patio and there are numerous places to sit. You've set a table for people who prefer to eat at one, and it's easy to change the plates as newcomers arrive, or add another setting or two.

"Please come for a light lunch"

It's an uncommonly fresh summer day, you have made a lemon mousse, and suddenly you feel like asking five friends for luncheon. From the freezer, which you have kept fully stocked just for times like this, you take a spinach, egg, and mushroom ring, heat it, fill it with steamed carrots (pulled early in the morning from the garden), and spoon over all a spinachy cream sauce. You set the table with your best things to make the impromptu meal even more delightful and another trip to the garden adds fresh flowers to your ever-ready basket of plastic leaves to make a centerpiece.

But the hot dogs, hamburger, tomatoes, and onions are already packed in a big plastic container in the refrigerator since you expected to cook them on the terrace. So, borrowing the children's red wagons, you load them with everything, including a snappy checkered cloth with plastic plates to match. Borrowing a child to carry the broiler with its gas cylinder, you bring lunch to the court. The déjeuner sur l'herbe might be your guests' fondest memory.

THE COOLING DRINKS OF SUMMER

and how to keep them icy

By James A. Beard

As the frosty temptations on pages 104-105 show, ice is more than a mere refrigerant for a drink. Ice lends itself to shaping and coloring, garnishing and flavoring; films the outside of a glass with frost; frappés a cocktail.

Ice bowls, blocks, and cubes

In the hands of an artist, ice can be impressively shaped. Ice sculpture, once the professional's tour de force, has recently been taken up by a number of enthusiastic amateurs. Joseph Amendola, the chef who created the ice punch bowl on page 105, has written a most enlightening book called Ice Carving Made Easy (Dow Publishing Co., Stamford, Conn., $5) in which he explains and shows the techniques of working with blocks of ice. A rounded bowl is a fairly simple form that you might attempt yourself with the aid of the book, or have made for you by a caterer who specializes in ice carvings for banquets. When using an ice bowl, be sure to place it on a plastic or metal tray or platter deep enough to hold the accumulated drips. You can hide the tray and the base of the bowl with cut flowers or ferns.

To fill the ice bowl (or a regular punch bowl), here are two colorful and refreshing punches using white wine and champagne:

SUMMER PUNCH
3 fifths dry white wine
1½ cups crème de cassis or cassis syrup
12 orange slices, cut in half
1 pint strawberries

Mix the wine and crème de cassis, add a block of ice (if using a regular punch bowl), and float orange slices and strawberries on top. Makes 25 cups of punch.

For a single drink variation on this punch, put 3 tablespoons crème de cassis (or less, to taste) into a tall, chilled glass, add a dash of kirsch, and fill with cold champagne.

ORANGE-GRAND MARNIER PUNCH
2 cans frozen orange juice, thawed and undiluted
1 cup Grand Marnier
4 fifths extra-dry champagne, well chilled

Combine orange juice and Grand Marnier in bowl. Pour champagne over them. Add block of ice, if necessary. Makes about 35 cups of punch. Variation: instead of orange juice, use 1½ quarts of orange sherbet.

If you prefer, serve the punch as an individual drink. Chill or frost glass thoroughly, then add a jigger of Grand Marnier and a jigger of orange juice and fill with chilled champagne.

To freeze whole bottles in a block of ice (an especially good trick for vodka, gin, aquavit, the white fruit brandies, or even a bottle of made-up martinis), you will need a mold or container deep enough to hold a bottle up to the neck—a large tin, a half-gallon milk container of plastic or waxed cardboard, a plastic bucket, or even a large saucepan or the bottom of a double boiler. Place the bottle in the center of the container and fill with water (tinted, if you like, with blue or green food coloring). Leave in the freezer until solidly frozen, then unmold the block. The "iceberg" will hold for several hours and makes a great talking point. To pour, wrap a folded linen napkin around the ice block to hold it securely and protect your hands.

Tequila and rum are other liquors that take to freezing. Tequila tastes delicious icy cold, poured into a frosted glass, and even better when made into a Margarita with fresh (not preserved) lime juice. Before freezing rum, I like to follow the example of one governor of Tahiti and add a vanilla bean to the bottle, leaving it for twenty-four hours. For a delightfully subtle summer tipple, pour the chilled, flavored rum into champagne coupes filled with crushed ice and top with a slice of lime. Or, for an unusual rum punch, add two vanilla beans to the bottle, then combine the fifth of rum with 1 cup fresh lime juice and 4 cups tea. Freeze additional tea in a large block to float in the punch bowl.

Cubes of frozen tea and coffee are preferable to ice for chilling tea and coffee drinks, as there is no dilution of strength or flavor. Russian Tea—iced tea with lemon and a dash of rum—becomes even more delicious with frozen tea cubes. Another heady summer potable is Brandied Moka. For 8-10 servings, combine 1 quart strong coffee and 1 quart rich chocolate, cooled. Add cognac (or rum) to taste and serve in tall glasses with coffee cubes and a topping of whipped cream garnished with shaved chocolate or a dusting of cinnamon. Or ladle from a chilled punch bowl, adding cream to taste instead of whipped cream.

Another amusing conceit is to tint water with a few drops of red food coloring or Angostura bitters for pink ice cubes, green food coloring for light green. Pop them in a pale tall drink such as a Tom Collins, a gin and tonic, or a Pimm's Cup. If you freeze garnishes in ice cubes, choose the individual ice containers that sit in a tray; the cubes are larger and easier to extricate. Among your frozen assets might be: twists of lemon or orange zest, tiny sections of lime and lemon, cubes of pineapple, strawberries, cherries, mint or borage leaves. If you can find the really minuscule currant tomatoes, they make an appropriate frozen garnish for a Bloody Mary, a non-alcoholic tomato juice cocktail, or a bowl of gazpacho.

Frosted and frappéed drinks

One of the most famous of all summer drinks is the mint julep, and its success depends on a well-iced glass or mug. The trick is to stir the shaved ice, bourbon, and crushed mint mixture together so thoroughly that the glass is frosted in the process. If the ice reduces substantially in volume during the stirring, add more ice and additional bourbon to taste. The julep should be well blended, but potent enough to remind you that you are drinking bourbon.

The anis drinks (ouzo, Pernod, Ricard, pastis, and arak) that turn cloudy when touched by water are delightful summer coolers if served in frosted glasses with quantities of crushed ice and perhaps a sprinkling of sugar, powdered mint or borage, or a sprig of fresh tarragon. Pack stemmed glasses tightly with crushed ice, pour the spirit over it and stir. For a Roman snowball, use the same method with the Italian licorice-flavor liqueur, Sambuca Romana, and top it off with the traditional mosca—three coffee beans to be chewed like candy after they have absorbed the flavor of the liqueur.

The iciest of all drinks are the frozen or frappéed type. If you make them in a blender, take the following precautions or they may turn to water rather than the desired sherbet-like consistency. Make certain the liquor is at room temperature—that is, in the low 70's or upper 60's. Be sure to use finely shaved ice. For two drinks you will need 2 cups crushed ice, 3½-4 ounces liquor, and lime or lemon juice (1-2 tablespoons per drink) to taste. Simple syrup is the best sweetener; it blends with liquid more easily than sugar. Pour juice, syrup, and liquor into the blender container and then add the ice. Turn on the blender and keep close watch. If the mixture begins to turn watery, switch off and add more crushed ice. If it freezes to a solid mass, switch off and break it up with a spatula. The drinks that lend themselves to frappéing are the daiquiri, the Margarita, the whiskey sour, and the gin fizz. (A Bloody Mary can be frozen, but less successfully.) You will need white rum, lime juice, and a bit of syrup for the daiquiri; bourbon, lemon juice, and syrup for a whiskey sour; gin, syrup, and lemon or lime juice for a gin fizz; tequila, lime juice, and a touch of Triple Sec for the Margarita. Before pouring the Margarita into the glass, rub the rim with a cut lemon and dip it into coarse salt.

Frosty drinks always taste better (and keep their cool longer) when served in frosted glasses. Put glasses in the refrigerator or freezer, or for a quicker method, dip them into warmish water for a moment and then into crushed ice, or stand them in crushed ice, bottoms up, until well chilled.

HOUSE & GARDEN'S

Summer Party Cook Book

By James A. Beard

Summer frequently means not only a change of scene from the city or suburbs to the country or shore, but a switch in approach to entertaining. Even if you live in the country the year-round, the exigencies of weekend guests and summer community life mean that you have to adapt your normal routine to accommodate a flexible but constant pattern of hospitality. Any eventuality has to be considered and coped with, from the invited who straggle in at odd hours on Friday evening, to the last-minute additions to the Saturday night barbecue or Sunday brunch. Forethought can save wear and tear on your nerves and energy. Make Friday dinner a casual affair, based on foods that can be reheated or grilled at a moment's notice if arrivals are delayed, plus a substantial salad, bread, cheese, and fruit. Give yourself a breathing space on Saturday morning by packing a picnic lunch to be carried wherever the mood takes the other members of the household. This will give you time to pick up any local specialties and seasonal fruits and vegetables you may need for dinner. Or you might plan a buffet and order some of the dishes, such as a complicated aspic or mousse, from the town caterer or club.

Small-town food supplies, although amazingly varied these days, do have their limitations. If you are lost without certain cooking standbys, you can always arrange to have them shipped to you from the nearest department store with a specialty food department. But do take a day to snoop around the highways and byways to see what is available locally, especially if you are spending the summer in an unfamiliar resort or community. You will be astonished at the products that can turn up in the seafood stores, shops, and farmer's markets, from different kinds of fish and shellfish to wonderful home-baked breads and cakes and unusual salad greens and fresh herbs, all of them the better for being freshly caught, baked, or picked. And don't neglect the refrigerator lockers in the supermarkets. Many of the frozen breads and pastries lend themselves to all kinds of adaptations by the creative cook. If your entertaining is to be as pleasant for you as for your guests, ingenuity, investigation, and improvisation should be your watchwords. In the menus that follow, you will find seven plots for parties that would work equally well wherever you make your summer entertaining headquarters.

A POOLSIDE DINNER

Pools are not only for swimming. They can also provide a cool, shimmering background for a delightful and elegant dinner party as a switch on the usual terrace setting. The menu, naturally, stresses seafood—a creamy chilled clam bisque and cooled salmon with green mayonnaise. A whole salmon will easily serve 18 to 20 guests, so if you want to enlarge the party, all you have to do is double or triple the other recipes. With this rich dinner, serve a light summer punch beforehand and an excellent Moselle, a Wehlener Sonnenuhr, with the soup and salmon.

NEW POTATOES*
TOMATOES STUFFED WITH SMOTHERED CUCUMBERS*
THIN BROWN BREAD-AND-BUTTER SANDWICHES*
HOMEMADE PEACH ICE CREAM WITH FRESH PEACHES IN BOURBON*

Cold Clam Bisque

½ cup rice
4 cups clam broth
1 pint cherrystone or razor clams
3 tablespoons butter
Salt, pepper
1½ cups heavy cream
Finely chopped parsley and chives

Cook the rice in the clam broth for 45–50 minutes, or until it is very soft. Whirl in a blender or put through a fine sieve. Purée clams in blender, or chop very fine. Combine rice-broth mixture, clams, and butter. Heat to boiling, reduce heat, and simmer for 5 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Cool. Combine with heavy cream and chill thoroughly. Serve in cups set in a bed of crushed ice. Sprinkle soup with chopped parsley and chives and serve with water biscuits. Serves 6–8.

Cooled Salmon with Green Mayonnaise

1 pint white wine
1 onion stuck with 2 cloves
1 teaspoon thyme
12 peppercorns
1 tablespoon or more salt
Whole salmon weighing 9–10 pounds
1 lemon, cut into thin slices
Several sprigs parsley

Combine the wine, 3 cups water, onion, thyme, peppercorns, and salt in a fish cooker or deep pan large enough to accommodate the salmon. Bring to a boil and simmer for 20 minutes. Measure the cleaned salmon at the thickest point, and place on a triple-layered piece of cheesecloth, leaving ends long enough to use as handles in lifting the fish. Lower the fish into the liquid. It should be completely covered.

Bring to a boil, reduce the heat, and simmer. Allow 10 minutes per inch of measured thickness. Remove the fish and allow to cool. Just before serving, arrange on a platter or plank and remove the skin. Arrange lemon slices down the middle of the fish, and garnish with lemon wedges or rounds and parsley. The fish should be barely cold when eaten. Allow about ½ pound salmon per serving. Serve with Green Mayonnaise.

Green Mayonnaise

1 cup chopped cooked spinach, well-drained
1 tablespoon each chopped parsley, tarragon, chives
2 cups mayonnaise
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
Salt to taste

Wash spinach well and cook until just wilted. Do not overcook. Chop very fine and combine with the chopped herbs. Fold into the mayonnaise with the mustard. Let stand for 2 hours and taste for salt. Makes about 3 cups.

New Potatoes

Leave skins on tiny new potatoes, or peel a thin band of skin from around them lengthwise. Boil, drain, and toss with plenty of butter, finely chopped parsley, and fresh chopped mint.

1 tablespoon vanilla extract
2 cups finely crushed fresh peaches
¼ teaspoon salt

Combine all ingredients in a large bowl and blend well. Taste for flavor. Transfer to an ice-cream freezer. Pack freezer with ice and salt, using about 6 parts ice to 1 part coarse salt, and turn until mixture is frozen. Remove dasher from container, and pack container in additional ice and salt. If you do not have an ice-cream freezer, buy a good brand of peach ice cream. Serve with Fresh Peaches in Bourbon. Serves 6–8.

Fresh Peaches in Bourbon

For each serving, slice 1 large peach, and sprinkle with 2 teaspoons sugar and 1 tablespoon bourbon. Spoon over the ice cream. Top with whipped cream for greater embellishment.

A GARDEN BREAKFAST

This Sunday or holiday breakfast for 20 to 30 people is rather elastic in timing. It can extend over several hours with guests dropping in between noon and three o'clock, and sports alternating with food and drink. Early arrivals might like to have a glass of champagne and the first course before a game of croquet or tennis, and an omelette afterward.

For the omelette bar, set up small stoves or burners (either propane or electric) on a table with all the makings and fillings. If you are an expert at omelettes, make your own. Otherwise, don't attempt such a feat with an audience of hungry guests, but get professional assistance. Instead of having one center for drinks, station enormous coolers of champagne and white wine (a Pouilly Fumé or California Pinot Chardonnay) at two or three spots around the garden, with ice, glasses, and crème de cassis for those who might prefer a kir (white wine tinged with cassis). Reserve a shady niche for hot and iced tea and coffee.

Prosciutto with Figs or Melon

If figs are in season, arrange them on platters, peeled, and well wrapped with prosciutto slices. Lacking prosciutto, you can substitute paper-thin slices of Smithfield ham or good Genoa salami. If figs are not available, serve wedges of cantaloupe or other melon in its prime. The accessories: small plates, forks, and pepper grinders.

Omelettes

Gauge about 2½ eggs per omelette. For 30 people you will require a minimum of 6 dozen eggs, and if you encounter some hearty appetites, you may need as many as 9 or 10 dozen. Add about 1 teaspoon of water, a little salt, and a few dashes of Tabasco or similar hot pepper sauce for every serving. The egg mixture for a dozen or a dozen-and-a-half omelettes can be prepared ahead. Have butter ready for the pans and warm plates waiting to receive the finished omelettes. Offer 2 hot fillings, 1 warm, and 1 cold. Keep hot and warm fillings in chafing dishes or on a hot tray; the cold fillings in a bowl. Make omelettes according to the method you prefer. The following are some suggested fillings:

Ratatouille

3 medium onions, thinly sliced
½ cup olive oil
3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 eggplant, cubed
3 small zucchini, thinly sliced
1 green pepper, seeded and cut into thin strips
2 cups canned Italian plum tomatoes
2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons chopped fresh basil or 2 teaspoons dried

Sauté onions in oil until limp. Add garlic, eggplant, zucchini, and green pepper, and cook over high heat until wilted. Add the tomatoes, mix well, and bring to a boil. Simmer until the vegetables have cooked down and most of the liquid has evaporated. Add seasonings and cook down for another 5 minutes. Correct the seasoning. Keep filling just tepid.

Fresh Tomatoes with Onion

6 tablespoons butter
6 tablespoons finely chopped onion
12 ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded, and chopped
1 tablespoon fresh tarragon, finely chopped
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

Melt the butter in a skillet, add the onion, and cook until just wilted. Add the tomatoes, bring to a boil, and reduce the heat. Simmer until cooked down and blended with the onion. Add seasonings and let the mixture simmer for 5–6 minutes. Keep quite hot.

Curried Chicken

1½ cups Béchamel sauce made with chicken broth
1 cup heavy cream
2 tablespoons curry powder
1 tablespoon turmeric
1 tablespoon chopped chutney
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
¼ teaspoon hot liquid pepper sauce (Tabasco, Frank's, Pickapeppa)
2 cups cooked diced chicken (mostly dark meat)

Make a rather thick Béchamel sauce and add the heavy cream, curry powder, and turmeric. Simmer for 8–9 minutes over low heat, stirring constantly. Add the chopped chutney, and simmer for 2 more minutes. Add seasonings. Finally, add the chicken and heat through. Keep hot. Serve a dollop of chutney with each curried omelette, if desired.

Pesto

½ cup olive oil
1½ cups fresh basil leaves
3 large cloves garlic
½ cup pine nuts
1 cup parsley sprigs
½ cup grated Romano cheese
Salt to taste

Combine first 6 ingredients in an electric blender and blend to a smooth paste. Add 1 teaspoon salt or more, to taste.

Baked Tomatoes with Sautéed Mushrooms

2 pounds mushrooms, coarsely chopped
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
¾ pound butter
3 tablespoons olive oil
Salt, pepper
12 firm, ripe tomatoes (or 1 per person)
12 mushroom caps (or 1 per person)
Additional butter

Sauté the chopped mushrooms and garlic in the butter and oil over low heat for 1 hour or more, or until they are quite dark. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Remove tops from the tomatoes and scoop out seeds and some of the flesh. Fill shells with the cooked mushrooms. Sauté mushroom caps in butter over rather high heat for just 3 minutes. Top each tomato with a cap. Arrange in a buttered baking dish, and add about ¾ cup water. Bake in a 350° oven for 15–20 minutes, or until just heated through. Makes 12 servings.
Note: If you wish to double or triple the recipe, use 3–4 pounds mushrooms.

Strawberries Glacé

4 cups sugar
1 quart ripe strawberries

Combine 2 cups of the sugar and 2 cups water, and boil until the syrup spins a thread. Add strawberries and remaining sugar. When sugar has blended, cook for 18 minutes, or until the berries are still whole, but nicely glazed. Allow to cool. Serve with French bread, brioches, cream cheese, and butter. Double or triple recipe according to number of guests.

A COOPERATIVE DINNER PARTY

If your summer circle of acquaintances includes a number of people who love to cook, capitalize on their talents and plan the kind of party where each couple brings a course. In this way, everyone has the pleasure of participating without being overburdened, and the result is often some extraordinarily fine dining. As the hostess, you will probably find it most convenient to supply the main course, especially if this is to be barbecued meat that will be prepared while the party is in progress. Our menu teams charcoal-broiled legs of lamb with a cold soup and dessert, both easy to prepare ahead of time. Serve big pitchers of sangria with the lamb.

Marinated Eggplant Slices

2–3 eggplants
Marinade used for lamb
Oil
Salt, pepper

Cut the unpeeled eggplant in slices about 1" thick and marinate for half-an-hour. Remove from the marinade, brush with oil, and grill over coals with the lamb until nicely browned on both sides. Brush with the marinade, and season with salt and pepper to taste.

Summer Pudding

Thin slices of slightly stale bread
1 quart raspberries
½ pint red currants
1 cup sugar
Heavy cream (optional)

Remove the crusts from the bread. Arrange slices overlapping in a round mold so that the fruit juice will not leak through. Save a few slices for the top. Combine fruits and sugar, and cook for about 3–4 minutes. (You may use equal proportions of currants and raspberries, if you prefer.) Spoon fruit into the mold, reserving some of the juice. Top with bread slices to seal completely, and cover with a plate that will fit tightly inside the mold. Weight with a 2-pound object and refrigerate for 12–24 hours. To serve, unmold, and pour either the reserved fruit juice or heavy cream over the pudding. This is a truly refreshing dessert for the summer months.

END-OF-THE-SEASON COCKTAIL BUFFET

With Labor Day weekend comes the nostalgic closing of a summer home, and the practical problem of settling social accounts. If you need to invite more friends and neighbors than your house can hold, the logical thing to do is to plan a big cocktail buffet and move the party outdoors, to the terrace and garden. Set up a couple of strategically placed bars, one for a refreshing summer punch (for recipes, see page 112), the other for the usual highballs and mixed drinks. Provide some easy-to-eat foods that don't require a plate to be juggled along with a glass, and a succulent roast of meat, thinly sliced and served on bread, for those who need more solid sustenance. For this kind of menu where certain foods (the pizzas and corn) are to be served piping hot, it pays to hire someone to do the last minute cooking.

Tiny Pizzas

These may be prepared with a pizza dough or with refrigerated biscuits. If you use the latter, roll them or pat them out very thin and brush the surface with a little olive oil before spooning on the filling.

1 cake or package yeast
1 cup warm water
1 tablespoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
Olive oil
Approximately 4 cups flour
Onion Purée or Tomato Sauce
Thin slices of Mozzarella or Switzerland Gruyère cheese, or grated Gruyère cheese
Thin slices of salami, pepperoni, or any good cured sausage
Anchovy fillets
Soft Italian olives
Tuna fillets
Grated Parmesan or Romano cheese
Hot peppers
Dried or fresh thyme or basil

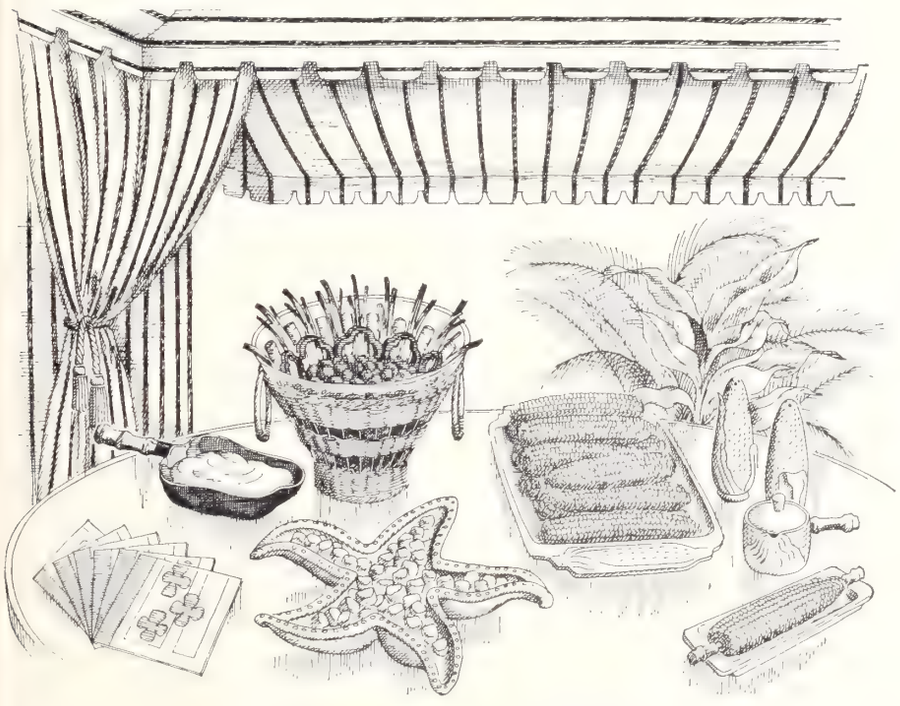
Dissolve the yeast in the warm water with the salt and sugar. Combine with 2–3 tablespoons olive oil and about 2 cups of flour. Roll out on a floured board and knead in enough flour to make a stiffish dough. Continue kneading until the dough is smooth and elastic. Place in a warm, draft-free spot and let rise until double in bulk. Punch down. Divide the dough in half, roll out, and cut into rounds varying from 2½" to 4" in diameter. Arrange on buttered cookie sheets and brush with olive oil. Spoon Onion Purée or Tomato Sauce on the pizzas and top with your choice of any of the remaining ingredients. You can, of course, add anything to your pizzas that imagination and taste suggest. A sprinkling of oregano is the traditional seasoning, but try thyme or basil instead. The flavor is much subtler. If fresh basil is in season, use it lavishly. Brush the prepared pizzas lightly with oil and bake in a 400° oven until crisp. Serve at once. Make plenty of these little goodies.

Onion Purée

3 large onions, finely chopped
1 5 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon salt

Sauté the onions gently in the butter until they begin to turn golden. Season with salt. Cover and steam for about 10 minutes, or until quite soft, then cook down until most of the liquid has evaporated—they should be almost a paste. Anchovies and soft black olives make an excellent topping.

Tomato Sauce



12–14 ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded, and chopped (or 2 29-ounce cans Italian plum tomatoes)
3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons sugar
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 medium onion, sliced
1 6-ounce can Italian tomato paste
1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil or 1 teaspoon dried
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

Unless the tomatoes are very ripe and flavorful, it is better to use the canned Italian plum tomatoes. Cook fresh tomatoes in a heavy skillet with the butter and oil until heated through. Add salt, sugar, garlic, and onion. Cook down well, stirring from time to time. Add tomato paste and seasonings and cook for about 15–20 minutes over medium heat. Strain through a fairly coarse sieve. Correct seasoning. Makes about 3 cups.

Crudités with Flavored Mayonnaises

Assemble a variety of very fresh vegetables that taste good raw, such as baby carrots and turnips, scallions, radishes, rings of green pepper, thinly sliced small zucchini, cucumber strips, and various kinds of tomatoes. A local farmers' market is a good place to shop; the produce is usually brought straight from the garden. You might also have bowls of very young tender peas in pods and freshly gathered fava or broad beans (to be dipped in coarse salt).

As a dip for the vegetables, serve mustard mayonnaise, anchovy-garlic mayonnaise, and coarse salt and pepper. For 25 or 30 people you will need at least a quart of homemade mayonnaise. Add 3 tablespoons or so of Dijon mustard to 1 pint; 3 cloves crushed garlic and about 12 chopped anchovies to the other pint. If you have a blender, blend the anchovies and garlic with a small amount of oil, then stir this paste into the mayonnaise.

Striped terrace awning shelters the tempting local foods of an end-of-the-season cocktail buffet. Crudités nest in a straw-covered bowl, and hot ears of corn from the farmer's market on a corn-patterned platter. Starfish dish holds Scallops Seviche.

Cooled Sirloin Roast or Stuffed Double Loin of Pork

If your oven is large enough, either of these roasts may be prepared at home. If not, ask a local caterer, restaurant, or club to cook the roast for you and have it picked up or delivered just in time for the party. The beef should be cooled (not chilled) with still a touch of warmth in it. Slice it thinly and then cut into strips that will fit on top of small slices of buttered bread. Serve the cooled sirloin roast with a selection of mustards and relishes.

For the pork roast, buy two loins, boned and tied together, and stuff with pistachio nuts, raisins, slivers of garlic, and thyme. To stuff, make deep incisions in the meat with a paring knife or apple corer, and force the nuts, raisins, garlic, and thyme into them. Rub the surface well with salt and additional thyme. Roast on a spit over charcoal or in the oven on a rack in a shallow pan, basting with a mixture of red wine and the pan drippings, until the pork reaches an internal temperature of 165°–170°. This should take about 3½–4 hours. Allow the pork to cool before serving, but do not refrigerate. Carve thinly and serve with a variety of mustards, horseradish, and thin slices of bread.

Small Ears of Hot Corn with Pepper Butter

If the local farms sell corn, order smallish ears for the day of the party and ask to have them picked as late as possible. Boil ears according to your favorite method, and serve immediately on platters covered with linen napkins to absorb the moisture. Cook and serve only as many as are needed. Pass small bowls of Pepper Butter with the corn.

Pepper Butter

1 pound butter
2 green peppers, seeded and finely chopped
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper

Cream the butter well. Fold in the chopped green peppers and freshly ground black pepper. Put in small butter dishes.

Scallops Seviche

(See cook book cover)

3½ pounds bay scallops
Lime juice
2 large red Italian onions, finely chopped
4-ounce can peeled green chiles, chopped
3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
2 green peppers, chopped
Chopped cilantro (if available) or sweet basil
2 teaspoons sugar
⅓ cup olive oil
¼ teaspoon liquid hot pepper sauce (Tabasco, Frank's, Pickapeppa)
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste

Put scallops in a bowl and add lime juice to cover. Cover bowl with foil and refrigerate for 3 hours. Drain scallops thoroughly. Mix other ingredients in a separate bowl and taste for seasoning. Add the scallops, toss well, and refrigerate until serving time. Garnish with additional chopped cilantro or basil and, if desired, sprinkle the top with a little finely grated orange zest for additional color.

A PICNIC AT THE BEACH

On a perfect summer's day, a beach picnic is just about the pleasantest and most popular way to entertain. A menu like this can be pretty well prepared ahead in your kitchen, and transported in portable ice chests and insulated bags. The salad greens, dressing, fruits, and cream should be kept cool until the last minute. For this shore feast, you will need a small folding charcoal grill to broil the shrimp and reheat the cioppino (take this along in large screw-topped jars, transfer to a casserole). In addition to the usual flatware, paper plates, napkins, and tablecloth, provide china or earthenware soup plates and, of course, glasses for cocktails (ready-mixed in vacuum jugs) and the California Pinot Noir wine that will accompany the wine-simmered cioppino.

Shrimp in Beer

2 pounds unshelled shrimp
1 large onion, thinly sliced
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon liquid hot pepper sauce (Tabasco, Frank's, Pickapeppa)
1 green pepper, finely chopped
2–3 cups beer
Skewers

Split the shrimp down the back with a scissors or with the special gadget designed for that purpose, removing the black vein, but leaving the shells. Place in a pan or bowl with the onion, garlic, salt, liquid hot pepper sauce, and green pepper. Cover with beer and marinate for 6–8 hours. Spear shrimp on skewers and broil over charcoal fire. Serve as an appetizer with cocktails accompanied by tiny rolls or Syrian bread, dishes of scallions, and cherry tomatoes.

Cioppino

This dish originated among the Portuguese and Italian fishermen of the California coast. It should be served in deep plates or bowls, eaten with forks and spoons, and partnered with good crisp bread.

1 quart clams or mussels
1 cup wine, red or white
2 Dungeness crab (in the West) or 1 pound crab meat (in the East)
½ cup olive oil
1 large onion, chopped
2 cloves garlic, chopped
1 green pepper, chopped
¼ pound dried mushrooms, soaked in water
4 tomatoes, peeled and chopped
4 tablespoons Italian tomato paste
2 cups red wine, preferably Pinot Noir
Salt, pepper
1 teaspoon dried basil or 2 tablespoons fresh basil, finely chopped
1 sea bass or striped bass, about 3 pounds, cut into serving pieces, or thick fillets of fish cut into serving pieces
1 pound raw shrimp, shelled
3 tablespoons chopped parsley

Steam the clams or mussels with 1 cup red or white wine until they open. Discard any that do not open. Remove from shells. Strain the broth through a fine cloth and reserve. If you are using Dungeness crab, break in pieces, and cut the back into sections. Heat the olive oil in a large pot and cook the onion, garlic, pepper, and mushrooms for 3 minutes. Add the tomatoes, and cook for another 4 minutes. Add the strained broth from the clams or mussels, the tomato paste, and the red wine. Season to taste, and simmer for about 20 minutes. Correct the seasoning and add first the basil, next the fish and cook through. Finally, add the mussels, the crab or crab meat and the shrimp, and heat until the shrimp are cooked through. Sprinkle with parsley and serve.

AN EXPANDABLE DINNER

The informality of summer weekend entertaining fosters parties that grow like a beanstalk, swelled by last-minute invitations, your neighbor's house guests, and your children's friends. Our menu, predicated on a guest list of 20, can easily be expanded to feed 10 or 12 more, with reserves of canned and bottled foods and sausages for the hors d'oeuvre table, canned beans, sausages, and cooked ham for the main dish, and plenty of fresh salad ingredients. Don't worry about leftovers going to waste. The fresh foods will keep for several days in the refrigerator. Unused flan rings can be frozen, and biscuits and crescent rolls refrigerated for future use.

For a party of this size, you will certainly need help in the kitchen to attend to the last-minute preparation and serving of food and the washing up, and someone at the bar to make drinks. With the food, have a choice of chilled beer, chilled champagne, and red wine en carafe.

Hors d'Oeuvre Table

This can be set up on the terrace, in the garden under a parasol, or where you will. Provide cutting boards for the sausages and raviers for the anchovies, olives, onions, pickled peppers, and other vegetables.

Sardines

Arrange a selection of French or Portuguese sardines on a platter. Garnish with lemon wedges.

Shrimp or Crab

Fill a bowl with shrimp, and accompany with a good homemade mayonnaise; or use crab meat with an herbed vinaigrette sauce.

Italian Pickled Peppers and Pimientos

Anchovies

Arrange alternate layers of anchovy fillets, finely cut scallions, and chopped parsley, adding oil from anchovies. Top with chopped parsley.

Braunschweiger

Try to get the variety called "goose liverwurst." Buy 2, slice 1, and keep the other in reserve in the refrigerator.

Salami

Buy 1 or 2 whole salami, either Italian or Hungarian. Thinly slice as needed.

Summer Sausage or Cervelat

Buy 1 or 2 of each and thinly slice as needed.

Spiced Olives

Choose several different types of olives, both green and black—Greek, Italian, small Spanish, soft black, American ripe olives. Stuffed olives are not suitable. You will need at least 2–3 pints, possibly 4–6 pints. Place in a gallon jar or crock and add 1 tablespoon freshly ground black pepper, 10–12 cloves garlic, crushed, 10–15 hot peppers, 2 lemons (sliced paper-thin) and 3 or 4 sprigs fresh dill. Add olive oil; the mixture should be almost covered.

These proportions may be changed to taste. Mix olives and seasoning well and allow to stand for several days or a week—the longer the better. Leftover olives will keep for at least another week.

Onions Marseillaise

5 pounds small white onions
1½ cups olive or peanut oil
1½ cups white wine
2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon thyme
1 or 2 cloves garlic
1 bay leaf
Hearty pinch saffron
2 tablespoons tomato paste
1 cup sultana raisins

Pour boiling water over the onions and leave for 5 minutes to loosen skins. Peel. Arrange the peeled onions in 1 large skillet or 2 smaller ones and add the oil, wine, 1 cup water, salt, pepper, thyme, garlic, and bay leaf. Poach the onions gently until tender, but still crisp. Add just enough saffron to give color and flavor, and stir in the tomato paste and the raisins. Cook for 12 minutes or so until the raisins are puffy. Transfer the onions to a serving dish. Cook down the sauce a bit and pour over the onions. Cool and chill.

Tomato Salad

Slice ripe tomatoes and dress with a vinaigrette sauce and a little chopped fresh basil.

Radishes

Clean radishes and put in iced water to crisp before serving.

Potée Berrichonne

For this dish, it is best to cook a whole ham according to the accompanying directions and slice as needed. Any surplus can be used for sandwiches, in salad, or ground for a mousse. Also have on hand extra sausages and 6-8 cans kidney beans.

4 pounds red kidney beans
2 whole onions, each stuck with 2 cloves
2 cloves garlic
1 bay leaf
1½ teaspoons thyme or more, to taste
Salt, pepper
5 large onions, peeled and diced
¼ pound butter
4–5 pounds cooked ham, thickly sliced
3–4 pounds sausage: kielbasy, Italian sausages, or Italian cotechino
Red wine
Bread crumbs
Bacon strips
Chopped parsley

Cover beans with water and bring to a boil. Boil for 10 minutes and then let stand for an hour. Add whole onions, garlic, bay leaf, thyme, and about 2–3 tablespoons salt. Bring to a boil again, and simmer until tender. Cool. (This quantity of beans may seem excessive, but it will be just enough for 20 people.)

Sauté diced onions in butter, adding more butter if needed. Salt and pepper to taste. Cook until soft, but not brown. Dice the ham slices and slice the sausage.

Arrange layers of beans, onions, ham, and sausage in baking dishes or casseroles. Taste beans for seasoning and add salt, pepper, and more thyme, if needed. Add just enough red wine to cover the beans. Bake in a 350° oven for 1 hour. Sprinkle with bread crumbs and top with strips of bacon. Return to the oven and bake at 300° for another 45 minutes. If the wine has cooked away, add more. Just before serving, sprinkle with chopped parsley.

Note: If you must draw on your reserves to feed more guests, drain the canned beans and combine with ham, sausage, extra sautéed onions and wine. Add 2 cloves garlic, finely chopped, and a bay leaf and bake as above.

Infinite Variety Salad

Comb the farmers' market and roadside stands for an interesting range of salad ingredients. Make your salad from any preferred combination of Bibb lettuce, Boston lettuce, leaf lettuce, salad bowl lettuce, romaine, watercress, radishes (sliced), cucumbers (seeded and sliced), cherry tomatoes, spinach leaves, young zucchini (sliced), celery (sliced), grated raw carrot, grated raw beet, scallions, sliced sweet onions, parsley. Wash, trim, and prepare your ingredients, combine, and store in large plastic bags until ready to use.

Toss with a vinaigrette sauce made with 3 parts olive oil to 1 part vinegar. For a basic quantity: mix 1½ cups oil, ½ cup vinegar, 1 tablespoon salt, 1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper, and chopped tarragon or basil to taste. If you like the flavor of garlic, rub 2 or 3 cloves into the salt before adding it to the dressing, or rub the end of a crisp loaf of French bread with garlic and toss with the salad. Be sure all ingredients are crisp and dry before you toss the salad, or the vinaigrette sauce will become too diluted.

Refrigerator Biscuits and Crescent Rolls

Biscuits and crescent rolls from the refrigerated cases in the supermarket are perfect for this kind of menu because they can be kept on hand and baked as needed. Before baking, dip biscuits in butter. Butter crescent rolls prior to rolling. Bake according to package directions.

Fruit Flans

Prepare your favorite pastry recipe and bake pie shells in flan rings or pie tins. You will need 5 shells for 20 people, but make 2 more to keep in reserve. You can bake the shells well ahead of the party and store them in the refrigerator. If you prefer, buy ready-baked pie shells. When ready to serve, fill shells with fresh or poached peaches, or fresh strawberries or raspberries. Brush with apricot glaze. Serve with sweetened whipped cream flavored with kirsch or cognac.

Apricot Glaze

2 pints apricot preserves
2 tablespoons kirsch or cognac

Heat the preserves to the boiling point and let bubble for 3 minutes. Add the kirsch or cognac and remove from the heat. Strain through a fine sieve. Cool slightly before glazing the fruit. This makes enough glaze for 3–4 flans.

Black and white polka-dot cloth and accessories and pierced tin candle-holders make an arresting background for an offbeat expandable dinner. Potée Berrichonne in casserole on hot tray and hors d'oeuvre dishes can be replenished with fresh supplies as more guests arrive.

A CITY PICNIC

The stay-at-home who savors the sophisticated pleasures and uncrowded streets of summer in the city can also share in the free-and-easy side of entertaining. A picnic, staged in the park or in an apartment, counterfeits the charms of rusticity. Terrace greenery can stand in for a country landscape when viewed from plump cushions flanking a long coffee table. The current rage for paper provides a plenitude of pretty things to supply the table and bedeck the scene, but if you are serving anything that needs to be cut, china plates are a necessity.

The pâté can be made several days ahead, but the game hens should be roasted just slightly in advance of the party, so they will be barely cooled when eaten. Start with an apéritif of champagne or a light drink, such as an Americano, and provide an abundance of Verdicchio on ice or in a huge wine cooler to accompany the pâté and game hens.

Pâté of Vitello Tonnato

2½ pounds veal from leg or shoulder
3 cloves garlic, crushed
1 veal knuckle bone
1 onion, stuck with 2 cloves
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
Dried or fresh basil
7-ounce can tuna in oil, finely shredded
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
Capers
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1 can beef bouillon, undiluted
Anchovy fillets

Make small incisions in the veal and insert the garlic. Place in a deep saucepan with the bone, onion, salt, and pepper, 1 teaspoon dried basil or a sprig of fresh basil, and enough water to come halfway up the meat. Boil for 5 minutes, skimming off any scum that rises to the surface. Reduce heat and cover. Simmer until the veal is tender and cooked through—it should not be falling to pieces. Remove veal and cook stock down by half. When the veal is partially cooled, remove all fat and put the meat through a meat grinder, using the finest blade. Combine with the tuna, 1 teaspoon dried basil or 1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil, the parsley, and 1 tablespoon capers. Blend well, moistening with a small amount of broth. Spoon mixture into a terrine or casserole. Cool and chill. Dissolve gelatin in ¼ cup cold water. Heat the bouillon to boiling, mix with the dissolved gelatin, and stir until blended. Cool until thick and syrupy, then spoon a thinnish layer of this aspic over the pâté. Decorate top with anchovy fillets and capers. Serve with hot toast and butter.

Rock Cornish Game Hens with Tarragon

6 Rock Cornish game hens
1 lemon, cut in half
Fresh tarragon
½ pound butter
Salt, pepper to taste

Rub the interior of the birds with the cut lemon and fill with sprigs of fresh tarragon. Chop enough tarragon leaves to make ¼ cup. Add to ¼ pound of the butter, softened, blend well, and rub the birds with this mixture. Season with salt and pepper. Melt the remaining butter for basting. Place the birds on their sides on a rack in a roasting pan and roast for 15 minutes at 350°. Turn on other side, baste well with pan juices and melted butter, and roast for another 15 minutes. Test for doneness. Turn birds on their backs and roast until tender, about another 10 minutes. They should not be overcooked. Allow birds to cool a little before serving, in case your guests prefer to eat the birds with their fingers rather than a knife and fork.

Note: For a darker skin, heat 5 tablespoons butter and 3 tablespoons oil in a heavy skillet, and brown birds on all sides. Transfer to rack and roast as above, basting often.

Potato and Hearts of Palm Salad

24 (approximately) tiny new potatoes in their jackets, well-scrubbed
Olive oil
Wine vinegar
Salt, pepper to taste
2 1-pound cans hearts of palm
¼ cup chopped parsley
¼ cup finely cut scallions or more, to taste
Salad greens
Hard-cooked eggs, sliced

Boil the potatoes in salted water until just pierceable. Cool slightly. Peel, slice thickly into a bowl, and add a little oil and vinegar. Salt and pepper to taste. Allow potatoes to cool in this marinade: they will probably absorb most of it. Cut the hearts of palm into ½" slices, using 1 good-sized stalk for each serving. Combine 3 tablespoons olive oil, 3–4 tablespoons wine vinegar, 1 teaspoon salt (or more, to taste), 1 teaspoon freshly ground pepper, the parsley and scallions to make a sauce. When the potatoes are almost cool, combine with the hearts of palm and the scallion sauce. Toss lightly and allow to mellow for 2–3 hours before serving. Serve on fresh salad greens, and decorate with sliced eggs and additional cut scallions. For a park picnic, pack the salad in a covered plastic bowl and put into an insulated bag.

Orange Sherbet

This should be served softly frozen, not hard. Freezing will take about 20 minutes in an ice-cream freezer and 2–3 hours if you use ice trays in the refrigerator freezing compartment.

1 cup sugar
½ cup lemon juice
1 cups frozen orange juice, thawed but undiluted
½ cup bitter orange marmalade
½ cup Grand Marnier

Cook 1 cup water and the sugar together until they come to a boil. Add the lemon juice and combine with the thawed orange juice. Fold in the marmalade and the Grand Marnier and freeze in an ice-cream freezer or in ice trays.

If you are using ice trays, remove the sherbet when barely frozen, beat well with a fork and return to the freezing compartment. Repeating this process will improve the sherbet, or you may prefer to incorporate 2–3 tablespoons of heavy cream to give it a smoother texture.

it took 12 weeks to build this Solid Cherry secretary.

But, that's not the only reason this Davis secretary will gracefully last a lifetime and longer. Davis designs especially for solid wood. Then patiently takes 1118 more conscientious steps to build one piece like this authentic Charles Donelson desk. It does make a difference . . . one your granddaughter will appreciate, too.

Carmel-by-the-Sea

From the Del Monte estate, we drove south to Carmel, which in the days of the Spanish colonization was the spiritual headquarters of the Monterey Peninsula. Carmel's sandy crescent bay, at the head of a broad valley of some of the best farming land in California (now famous for its artichokes, Brussels sprouts, and celery), was where the great Father Junipero Serra set up his mission to the Indians in the early summer of 1771. It was not until fifty years had elapsed, the mission had disbanded, and the church had almost fallen down, that antiquarian interests came to save it, and the site of Carmel was considered for a town. Developers only started work on the pine-covered dunes below the Mission in the early years of this century. They called the new village Carmel-by-the-Sea and from the very beginning artists and writers were encouraged to live there—in the hope, it is said, that their presence would lend the place the tone and distinction which would eventually attract the rich. And so it turned out. Robinson Jeffers, who built his stone house and tower with his own hands, is as closely associated with Carmel as Henry Miller is with Big Sur. The old Basilica of the Mission San Carlos Borromeo del Rio Carmelo has been superbly restored and offers a very good idea of the string of twenty-one missions, one day's walk apart, that once stretched across California.

Today, Carmel's artist-writer background, its mild Greenwich Village air, and its overtly anti-progressive inhabitants bring in as many tourists as the most conventionally business-minded town could want. There is one differ-

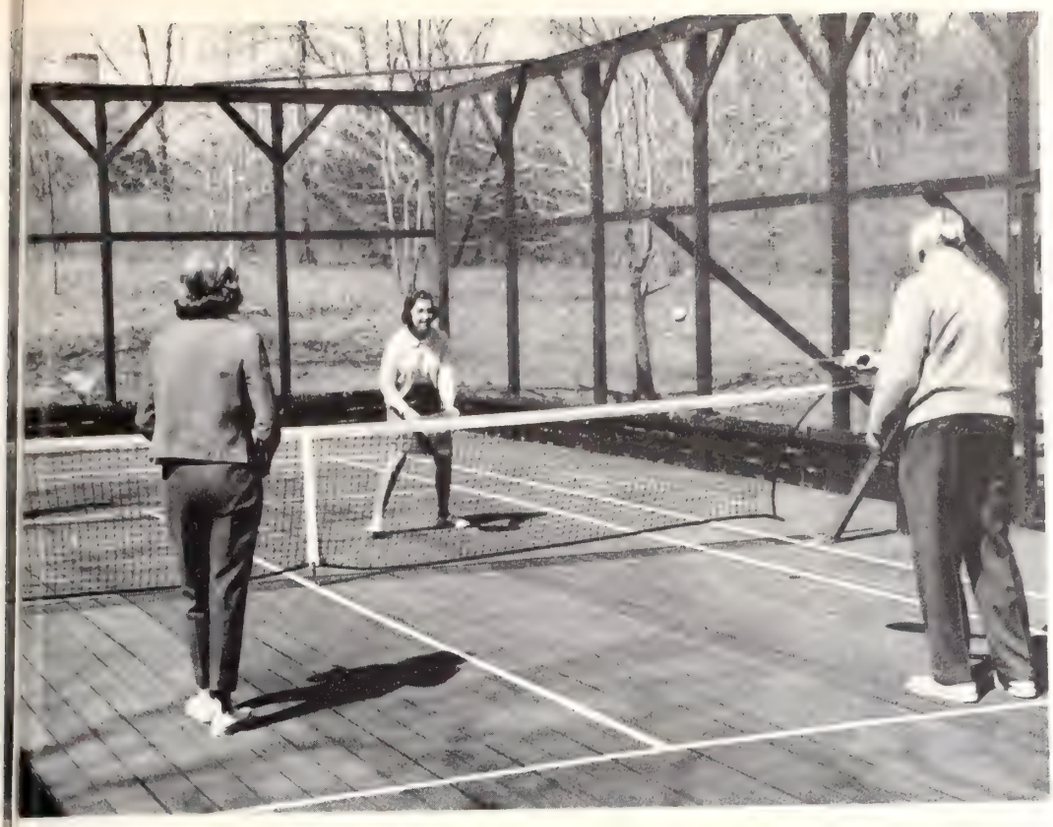
COUNTRY CLUB IN YOUR OWN BACKYARD

Sometimes hospitality is as much concerned with helping guests work up an appetite as with satisfying it once it has been acquired. Hardly a backyard or a lawn worthy of the name will fail to include at least one area suitable for some sort of organized competitive appetite builder. Lawn games is the euphemistic term for the kind of adversary recreation we have in mind, and it includes everything from mumbletypeg to lawn bowls. Within that range fall games (and courts) to serve all ages and physical conditions, and all kinds of investments for playing



KASPER

Bowling on the green is a true aristocrat among outdoor sports, best adapted to the economics of a thriving country club, otherwise an indulgence of the affluent only. Flawless turf, involving close mowing, is essential.

Badminton is most pleasantly played on well-maintained turf, but is almost as enjoyable on black-top paving or a composition on a sand-clay base, of which good tennis courts are made.

Paddle tennis (played with a wooden paddle liberally punctuated with holes) is best played on a wood plank surface and off wire sidewalls. This perfectly maintained regulation court of the Platform Tennis Club of New Canaan, Conn., a small group of congenial enthusiasts, is one of the country's oldest.

surfaces and equipment from zero to several thousand dollars. Full-fledged tennis courts need the most space, but require less tricky upkeep (unless they are turfed) than bowls. Croquet is what you make it—the English game on impeccable sod, with a single center stake, or the American version on almost any kind of turf, with two stakes, but no set pattern of wickets. Horseshoes, a neglected but noisily satisfying game, can be played in a meadow, and both badminton and basketball will take what you give them—driveways, concrete, grass. Paddle tennis should properly be played on a special court. Bocce is fun even in the street. Oh yes, and mumbletypeg can be played on any square yard of preferably yielding turf. (Continued on next page)

PADDLE TENNIS IS A MAN-SIZE GAME

The spaced boards of New Canaan court are finished with paint mixed with sand to ensure traction. Court's underpinnings (1) are of heavy timbers on concrete piers to support rigidly framed play surfaces. Venturesome players may take a rebound from the back or side nets if ball has touched the ground only once. Slat sections below wire (2) may be lifted to permit pushing snow or leaves from playing surface. Side and back wires are fastened to heavy horizontal beams (3) which are drawn down by long bolts extending through floor (4) to keep wire taut.

For any kind of game, standard instructions for laying out the court come with the equipment. Here is a summary of the types and over-all dimensions of the area required by a dozen of the likely home sports.

ARCHERY. Write this off if your site is small. Archery is for meadows, where adequate backstops can be set up, people kept from interrupting an arrow's flight, and the arrows easily recovered. If you have a clear space 200 or more yards long, you can have a real range. In half that space, with bales of straw for a backstop and no vulnerable objects beyond, modified archery is possible.

BADMINTON. Optimum area 75 by 50 feet. But the actual doubles court is only 44 by 20 feet. So juggle your total space as you think best. And of course compromise lines may be set up without spoiling the fun (as they may in other lawn sports). Black top paving, sand-clay, concrete (tough if you slip and fall), or turf are all possible surfaces.

BASKETBALL. It is doubtful if the game itself is adaptable to backyard or garden conditions. But basket shooting certainly is, and hotly contested battles can be staged around a single basket mounted on a backboard at reasonable height (say 9 feet), with safe run-under space below and beyond the backboard (an open garage door will often do). If your family, with the help of neighboring teen-agers, can supply a real team, you may want to set up a standard court on clay, concrete, or black top. In that case, allow a minimum of 75 by 40 feet for maximum fun.

BOCCE. An Italian adaptation of bowls, bocce is played with round balls, and any surface will do, in almost any dimensions. The principle of competition involves a target ball (jack) and up to eight bowling balls (and players).

BOWLS. On anything but a perfectly groomed level green (the standard size is 120 by 20 feet) lawn bowls becomes an impossible version of bocce played with oblate spheroids (instead of bocce's round balls) which are unmanageable except on the flat. Given a perfectly maintained green, bowls can separate men from boys i hurry.

CROQUET. The versions are end and the lawn proportions all infinite. At the top of the scale, official American game (for wh all our sets are planned) requi 70 feet between stakes and 30 between centers of wing wick Go on from there, even bend your court along the center l and unbalancing your wicket sp ing according to need or impul

DECK TENNIS or VOLLEY BALL. T standard court for either is 20 40 feet, but almost any area or s face will do. You would not ha much of a game, however, on court less than 15 feet long.

HORSESHOES. Officially, 40 f between stakes, each of which set in a 6-foot sandbox. Improvi as you like. But remember th pitched iron shoes can tear up t ground at a great rate.

LAWN TENNIS. A good tennis cou of clay, composition, or turf is matter for professional plannin and construction. Allow a clea rectangle of 120 by 60 feet ove all (for doubles-court, lines of 7 by 36 feet). Anything less wi hamper top-notch play, althoug for hacking about, a smaller are will do. The dimensions of th court itself, though, are not to b compromised.

PADDLE TENNIS (see page 127) While the game may be played al most as informally as deck tennis volley ball, or badminton, at it best paddle tennis is played on hard surface as well as off tightly stretched wire side walls of fixed height and at fixed distances from the court lines. This game can b an all year sport, so the court should be constructed to drain well and allow for easy sweeping of leaves and snow. A standard court is intermediate in size between regulation badminton and regulation lawn tennis. Paddle tennis played without use of the wire for angle shots can be played on the same court as badminton.

MUMBLETYPEG. Well, you see, you take this patch of soft lawn—preferably in the sun on a cool day and in the shade on a warm one—and sit down opposite your opponent, or, if it's a girl, maybe beside her. And you balance the point of this knife. . . .

day has the air of the village square in some remote European hamlet.

Carmel has an architectural style of its own. To me it seems inspired by children's book illustrations of the art nouveau period. Gingerbread houses, or cottages with flowing, vegetable-like lines that show a clear cousinship to the mushroom family stand under luxuriant parasols of greenery. Pines are everywhere. Ocean Avenue, Carmel's Main Street, is a cross somewhere between Anne Hathaway's cottage and the Rue de Rivoli. It is a strange mixture of quaint whimsey and rich sophistication. Shops that look like little tearooms tend to sell London fashions, Florentine jewelry, or a range of exotic foods and kitchenware it would be hard to find in New York. (Collector's Kitchen is good for copperware.) Art shops and studios flourish, although it is sometimes hard to tell where the whimsey stops and the serious art begins. The fringe arts—pottery, weaving, trinket-making—do a roaring trade alongside the mainstream painters and sculptors. One reason there seem to be endless shops without much apparent expansion is that the town is a complex of inner courts with clusters of little stores facing onto them.

Carmel's principal hotel is the Pine Inn on Ocean Avenue, and I have come across few prettier or pleasanter places to stay in the whole United States. Somehow the charm of the town is boiled down into the fresh and comfortable: beautifully equipped but Victorian inspired bedrooms, the dining room full of roses, the little flowery patio, the white shutters, the tall pine trees, and the funny irregular little passageways that lead to boutiques tucked into the walls of the hotel.

At the base of Ocean Avenue there is a curve of white sand about a mile long. While the waters all along this coast are really too cold (about 55 degrees) for comfortable swimming or sailing, with dangerous riptides, some undaunted people do swim and surf. On a warm Friday evening, between 7 and 11 o'clock, you will often see a "spontaneous" tailgate picnic of forty to fifty adults—people who just telephoned one another to assign various parts of the meal. Many of the picnickers gather mussels from the watery rocks below their houses to be enjoyed with Dungeness crab, great salads (a major pleasure in this area), fresh vegetables, clams or hot dogs, and fresh fruit.

Carmel now has several really good dining places. The finest is Marquis, a French restaurant on the corner of San Carlos and Fourth Streets, open only for dinner. Others are La Marmite, L'Escargot, Le Coq D'Or, or, for lovers of clams, the Clam Box.

A trip down the coast

The coastline to the south is yet another world. This is the territory of the seal and the sea lion from which Point Lobos takes its name —La Punta de los Lobos Marinos (Point of the Sea Wolves)—and a haven for flocks of pelagic birds: cormorants, pelicans, gulls, and other waterfowl.

The coastal road below Carmel is called the Cabrillo Highway after the Spanish seaman who first discovered this treacherous, rock-bound shore. As we left Carmel, we were warned by a sign: hills and curves next 74 miles! There are few roads like this one in the world; without spectacular canyon-leaping bridges it would be impossible. The coast writhes and plunges, towers up to the Santa Lucia mountains on the left and down to the boiling sea on the right—for one minute there is a peaceful grassy meadow; the next, the coast seems to tear a foaming gash right into the heart of the hills.

We were astonished to learn that there have been settlements here for a hundred years, long before the road was built. To approach this thundering, spray-whipped shore from the sea looks impossible. Yet tall ships did put

Big Sur

Big Sur is a hard place to pin down. It is a good twenty miles from the first sign of it until the last, as you twist in a trance of beauty down the Cabrillo Highway. The first evidence that you have arrived is Point Sur, where the coast suddenly makes what looks like an unreasonable inroad on the sea, buttressing a puny promontory of fields at wave level with a gigantic bastion of rock to seaward. A lighthouse blinks from this excrescence; the sea mist lends it a shawl. Strange, surrealist, anticipatory thoughts throng about you. Where is Big Sur? What is it? Surely it is unsafe to drive any farther down this road without knowing what to expect. Big Sur, fearful traveler, has already begun. It is not a city you have come to see, but a state of mind.

A few miles farther down the road we came across a sign: Big Sur, Population 300, elevation 243 feet. But we were not misled. This little collection of service buildings (including a pleasant motel, Glen Oaks) and a post office is only the official attempt to pin down Big Sur, on the theory that a place must be somewhere. Several miles farther on, in a magnificent stand of pines, we came across another notice: Pfeiffer-Big Sur State Park. We drove through it for a mile or two, looking around at the towering redwoods, the backdrop of grass mountain, its gullies growing violet as the light softened for evening; the burning majesty of the sun above the ocean mist. At last we were beginning to see Big Sur. More and more, as the road is mocked by this glorious meeting place of mountain and sea, as the light fades and the sea birds whirl in from the west, we understood what Big Sur is all about. People who live here come to be dwar to find a real sense of scale in ageless, manless world. Loneli in the face of earth and sky sea is the message of Big Sur- it can be said to have a messa And if you wonder who the p ple are, and where they are, v inhabits this invisible city, the swer is that they are hidden at cliff's foot or on the mount crest, and that they are peo who want time to think, who w to feel radically, as men face face with nature at her most e mental must feel, and who a prepared to sacrifice the conve tional values to find themselves.

Big Sur has a clubhouse —b the word gives a completely wro idea. Its name is Nepenthe, th of a fabulous plant known to t ancients which banished sorro and pain. Nepenthe is a restaura —but again the word gives t wrong idea. It is a house of tim ber and glass, perched hundred of feet above the ocean, with platform overlooking the sea an gazing up at the hills.

It was exciting to arrive a the clubhouse in time to watch th sun set over the Pacific. The effec is nearly indescribable—a grea blaze staining cloud and sea an bathing the shouldering hills rose gold. At night log fires burn in doors and out, huge dishes of sala and steak and chicken go around wine flows, and conversation rise and falls with the firelight and the candle flames.

Conversation has a way of being longer, more coherent, and more down to brass tacks here than almost anywhere else I know. Partly, it is the people who come down from the hills, or up from the beach; partly, it is the person- ality of the owner, Bill Fassett, a cheerful, articulate, tough-natured lover of his fellow men. Whatever it is, visitors find their reservations about this rocky coast and its devoted high priests disappearing in the smoke of Nepenthe's fires. This, perhaps more than any other spot, sums up and distills the lure of the Monterey Peninsula.

If you would like free literature about the Monterey Peninsula - where to stay, what to see, please fill in this coupon and mail to House & Garden Reader's Service, 420 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y., 10017.

INCORPORATING LIVING FOR YOUNG HOMEMAKERS

On the cover: A kitchen with a cool, sophisticated, blue and white china look that quite disclaims its location on the ground floor of a New York City brownstone. When [illegible] decided their obsolete kitchen, they wanted to bring lightness to the dark room, not only in terms of color, but of spirit. Mrs. Birenbaum, who is fond of blue and white china, loved the idea of translating its cool, clean look into a kitchen, via blue-figured Italian ceramic tiles, matte white ceramic counter tiles, and hand-hewn oak cabinets with a fumed-white finish. The 6-foot-long butcher-block table with authentic butcher-table legs makes a wonderfully versatile work center, also serves sometimes as a breakfast table. The globe ceiling light, with its bell-like copper shade, Mrs. Birenbaum came across in an antique shop. [illegible] designer Bert Wayne Lighting planner, Fred E. Drucker & Associates. "Please take care of my sister..."

TAICHUNG, FORMOSA—Two-year-old Su Ying, her parents dead, waits for her brother who will never return.

Little Su Ying was abandoned in the alley behind our Babies' Home in Formosa. She was frightened, cold and hungry.

But as you can see in the picture, someone had tried to make her look pretty. Her hair was combed and her dress, even though torn, was clean.

In her hand she clutched a note written by her brother:

"Please take care of my sister. Our parents are dead for many weeks. I am twelve and can no longer find food for this small sister. To my ears came news of your House, so I bring Su Ying to you."

Will you help us give Su Ying —and youngsters equally as needy —a chance to grow up in an atmosphere of love?

For only $12 a month you can sponsor such a child and receive his or her photograph, personal history, and the opportunity to write letters.

Your child will know who you are and will answer your letters. Correspondence is translated at our overseas offices.

(And if you want your child to have a special gift—a pair of shoes, a warm jacket, a fuzzy bear —you can send your check to our office, and the entire amount will be forwarded, along with your instructions.)

Since 1938, thousands of American sponsors have found this to be an intimate, person-to-person way of sharing their blessings with youngsters around the world.

And your help is desperately needed. Overseas, our staff reports boys and girls still search garbage dumps for food . . . babies abandoned in the streets . . . blind children locked in cellars . . .

Little Su Ying and children like her need your love. Won't you help? Today? Thank you.

Sponsors urgently needed this month for children in Korea, Taiwan, India, Brazil. (Or let us select a child for you from our emergency list.)

ENGLISH EARTHENWARE

This tureen with the mark pictured belongs to a supper set that includes six matching soup dishes. I think it is English ironstone. Can you tell its age?

Your tureen was made by Thomas Elsmore & Son at their Clayhills Pottery in Staffordshire, established in 1872. According to the registry mark, the set is earthenware and the pattern was registered at the British Patent Office on October 14, 1878.

SHERATON STYLE MIRROR

Can you tell me anything about my mirror which has 15 balls around the top?

E.M.A.—Macon, Ga.

Your ornamental mirror, decorated with an eglomisé panel, is in the Sheraton style. It is of English or American origin, made probably between 1810 and 1820.

OIL LAMP

I would appreciate any information you can give me about my antique solid brass lamp that was bought over fifty years ago in Berlin. The handle of the lamp ends in a dog's head; the handle of the stand ends in a hand clutching a snake.

M.S.—Glen Cove, N. Y.

Oil lamps such as yours were made in Europe during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries and copies are still being made. These lamps were adapted from those used in very ancient times.

GOTHIC CLOCK

Is this a cathedral clock? My mother's uncle bought it many years ago and we know it is not an antique, but the shape seems unusual. It is marked "Elliot of London" on the dial. V.Y.—Narberth, Pa.

If your tall clock of Gothic design has chimes, it can be called a cathedral clock. F. W. Elliot, London has been making such clocks for about sixty years. His slogan is "Designed by experts, built by craftsmen."

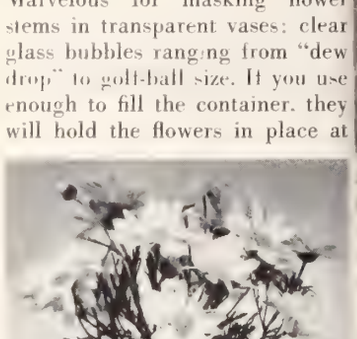
Notes for the Hostess

BY MARY MOON HEMINGWAY

Seems to me showers could be more imaginative than they often are. For a bride, how about a Hot-and-Cold Shower? Anything to keep things warm, light a fire, or cope with ice—hot trays, trivets, pot holders, log carriers, ice buckets, crushers, tongs. For the new homeowner, an Emergency Shower—flares, fuses, first-aid kit, oil lamp (and oil), super flashlight, fire extinguisher, transistor radio, fat candles, anything to help out in a crisis.



Touches to elevate a modest dinner party to four-star status: first course of classic (and substantial) hors d'oeuvres to be selected from a wheelabout cart; at each lady's place a tiny take-home orchid or camellia nested in miniature ivy in a small brandy glass; splits of champagne in an ice-filled punch bowl set out with glasses on the living room table for after-dinner refreshment.

At an after-dark hibachi party: terrace flower beds edged with "patio-sticks," those brilliantly painted metal rods and frames that support fat candles in double Old-Fashioned glasses. At this party, the sticks were painted orange and hot pink to match the tablecloths and napkins. After dinner the fading embers in the hibachis added to the over-all glow.

Now that the shiny patent-leather look is all around us, it surely deserves a place at the table. You can hardly beat shiny plastic place mats for practicality. And the strong solid colors offer great scope for mixing—tangerine with gold, moss green with turquoise, all white to set under bright china, all black to set under white. Stotter makes them.

Thoughtful gesture on the part of a camera-clicking host or guest after a party or weekend: to make copies of his shots, mount them on postal cards—noting date, place, names, etc.—and send to all concerned.

Marvelous for masking flower stems in transparent vases: clear glass bubbles ranging from "dew drop" to golf-ball size. If you use enough to fill the container, they will hold the flowers in place at the same time. In a large opaque bowl or shallow dish you could float a handful of bubbles on the surface of the water to hide the frog and add buoyance to the whole arrangement. The bubbles are by Langbein.

Emergency no-fuss casserole for unscheduled guests: frozen oysters, frozen crab meat and/or cooked shrimp, sauced with a generous amount of mayonnaise, topped with any prepared poultry seasoning, dotted with butter and baked. You can add tinned artichokes or green olives as well, but the magic is in the oysters.

COLLECTOR'S GUIDE TO AMERICAN SHOW MUSIC

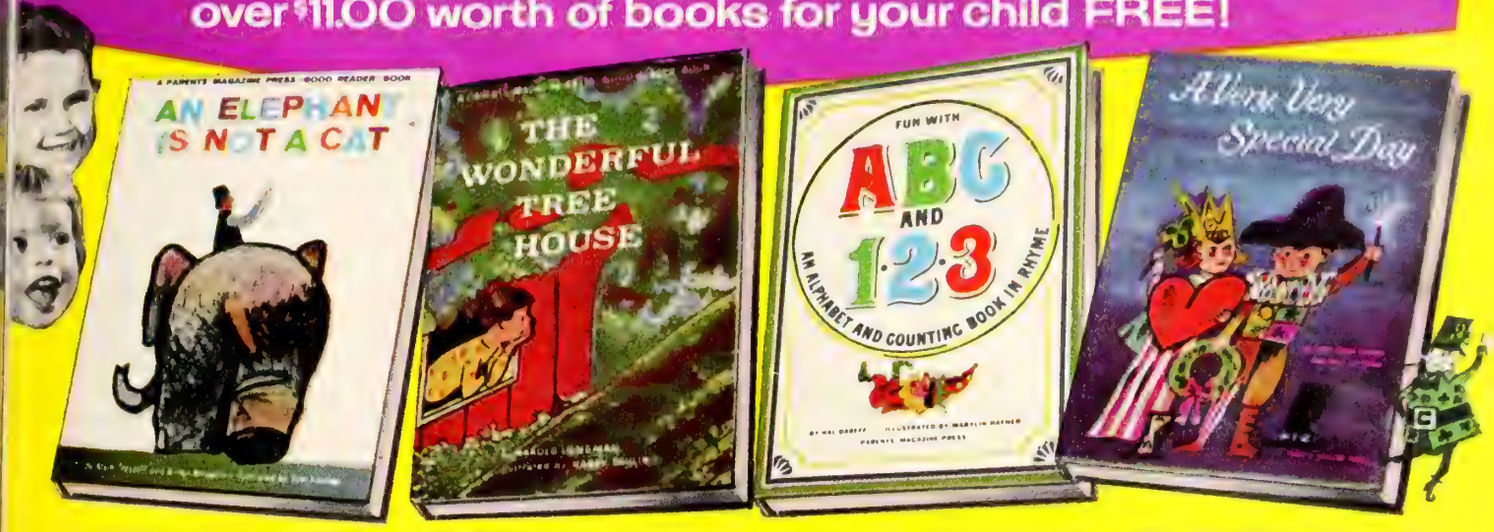
BY FAUBION BOWERS

The late Deems Taylor liked to point out that the world had produced only three perfected art forms which were also huge money-makers—Italian opera, Viennese operetta, and American musical comedy. Testimony to part of his thesis is the number of rehearings the best Broadway musicals can stand up to without losing any of their appeal. More than any other form except the acknowledged classics, good show music has the quality of timelessness that makes it worth collecting.

One man I know has a standing order with all the leading record companies for every original cast recording issued. Which is one way of collecting show music, if you have limitless storage space and care for no other kind of music. Most people prefer to be more selective, although the basis for their selections may be as highly personal as that of a coin collector who specializes exclusively in Italian ducats or Spanish doubloons. For some it may be strictly sentiment—each recording is a re-creation of the show itself, the night they saw it, the girl they took, the magical spell of the star. Others like to collect "firsts" to document show music history, in which case they would doubtless include the 1935 recording of "Porgy and Bess," the first original-cast album ever made; "On Your Toes," the first musical to introduce ballet sequences; and "Knickerbocker Holiday" with music by Kurt Weill and text by dramatist Maxwell Anderson, the first singing play with a note of philosophy. (No complete recording of the last exists, although Walter Huston's singing of "September Song" has recently been re-released in Epic Record's Footlight Series. But part of the joy of collecting is combing old record shops or secondhand furniture stores for out-of-date items.) Still others might build a collection based on box-office receipts—"My Fair Lady" would head their list.

More attractive to most music lovers, however, would be a collection of show music chosen exclusively for its musical value which often has nothing at all to do with whether the show itself succeeded or failed. "Candide," for instance: despite its brilliant authorship—book by Voltaire, adaption by Lillian Hellman, music by Leonard Bernstein, direction by Sir Tyrone Guthrie—ran for only seventy-three performances in 1956. Yet its music ranks with the best; in fact, Cunégonde's coloratura aria, "Glitter and be gay," is even more spectacular than Zerbinetta's famous aria in Strauss' Ariadne Auf Naxos and far more so than the "Jewel Song" from Faust. On the other side of the coin is "Hello, Dolly!," spectacular at the box office thanks to its succession of magnetic stars, but no less banal musically than the trashy tunes of the teens and twenties it purports to parody.

What then are the musically great shows in the history of the American theatre? Although any list of favorites is bound to be highly individual, certain outstanding masterpieces return to us in revival after revival, recording after recording.



When Jerome Kern's "Show Boat" steamed into town forty years ago, it started a new era of stage music. "Ol' Man River" with its resounding bass melody almost instantly became an art song, sung by operatic performers in concerts all over the world. In "Show Boat," for the first time, every idea, and some of them were pretty new in those days, was set like a jewel in appropriate and fitting music. "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man" was wholly believable because Kern's music, even when heard alone, seemed to express the heart of the thought with no need for words.

Some years after "Show Boat," Kurt Weill, a composer trained in the classics, came up with two marvelous show scores: "One Touch of Venus" and "Lady in the Dark." The leading role of the former was first conceived for Marlene Dietrich, but Weill knew he needed the singing of a goddess to put across his music so he enlisted Mary Martin who had been trained for opera by her violinist mother. Her memorable song, "Speak Low," haunting and chordally complex, and the bright ballet music for the earthbound Venus in Ozone Heights, express a breadth and depth which even Weill rarely attained. The complete score of "One Touch of Venus" was recorded for the first time not long ago by Mary Martin with full orchestral and vocal panoply. But whoever comes across the old original seventy-eights of the main songs has a genuine collector's item.

In total contrast to the "Venus" music was "Lady in the Dark." Here, since Weill was working with Gertrude Lawrence, primarily an actress, he thinned out the music and let her act her way through "The Saga of Jenny" to charming effect. But in the Circus dream sequence (where Danny Kaye, the ringmaster, pronounced the names of forty-nine Russian composers in thirty-nine seconds), Weill was impish and orchestrated the music with high impudence.

A new era

Richard Rodgers' "Oklahoma" marked a show-music turning point, the launching of the "perfect" musical. One night in 1943 (and for more than 2,000 performances thereafter) audiences left the theatre buoyed up, fulfilled, happy, and humming. They had heard music as natural as the soaring of a bird. From "Oh What a Beautiful Mornin' " to the finale, singable yet sensitive melodies streamed out in a continuous succession. Not sugary like Victor Herbert, nor gelatinous like Rudolf Friml, but pure, flowing, and often exalted music filled the theatre. For some inexplicable reason, it has always been difficult for music to express humor, but this problem, too, Rodgers solved in "Oklahoma." In contrast to Curly's affectionate musical courtship of Laurey, he composed genuinely funny music to accompany Ado Annie's "All Er Nothin" and "I Cain't Say No." The intervals are wide and harsh; the resolutions unexpected but delightful, with just enough coarseness to fit her character, place, time, and location.

In 1945 Rodgers followed up with "Carousel," based on Molnar's play, "Liliom." His music deepened. The plangent songs, "If I Loved You" and "You'll Never Walk Alone" had the musical force of an operatic "Credo." But it was not until "South Pacific" in 1949 that Rodgers achieved his supremely effective work. Never had finer, more moving, or even more serious music been composed for Broadway. For the first time Rodgers had, with the help of director Joshua Logan, found the formula for having the song gro out of the incident. The sung wor now became the naturally spoke word, but at an elevated, more i tense level. There were moment when the music sounded like th clearest verisimilitude to life, an others when the action looked a music must surely look if it coul be seen. The score for the mal lead, Emile de Becque, was s finely drawn, it took an operati bass, Ezio Pinza, to sing it.

Leonard Bernstein's first mu sical, "On the Town," astounde theatre-going audiences with it audacious use of orchestral an musical resources generally re served for serious music. This, too was a product of the forties; no until its successor, "Wonderfu Town," appeared in 1953, did the Bernstein imprint begin to be clear. The star of that show was Hollywood actress, Rosalind Rus sell. Her sense of timing was flaw less. She could talk and dance he way through Bernstein's most in tricate musical rhythms. But she could not sing, she said, and what voice she had was baritone. Never theless, it was decided that Miss Russell would have to sing, if only four notes, because audiences would demand it. Bernstein then composed his simplest song, the plaintive duet between the sisters, "Ohio." Coming as it did after all the brass and joyous noise of "Christopher Street," this oasis of peace and simplicity endeared the show to audiences.

Bernstein's musical genius culminated in the late fifties in "West Side Story." Never has he been so brilliant, intricate, and effective. Never before had Broadway heard the harsh harmonies and awkward vocal lines that belong within modern music's purlieu.

The fifties also brought us Frederick Loewe's "My Fair Lady," with music so expressive, so compactly and inevitably stated that not a note could be changed. And, of course, there was "Kismet," its music borrowed openly from some of the works of the great composer Alexander Borodin—he of Prince Igor fame—and adapted for the musical theatre by George Forrest and Robert Wright.

In the sixties we have already enjoyed "Irma La Douce" with Marguerite Monnot's haunting French music hall music, and in total contrast, "Bye, Bye, Birdie," composed with such youthful verve and zest by Charles Strouse that it was recorded before it had even opened on Broadway.

Although the original-cast recording of any musical seems to

GOING PLACES, FINDING THINGS IN

BY JOSÉ WILSON

Canada, in her centennial year, is an exciting, stimulatin place to visit, as a fresh spirit is animating our neighbor to th north. Until a decade ago, the country seemed bogged dow in convention and custom, more than a little behind the times. The in one giant surge, Canada sprang boldly into the mid-twentieth ce tury, and in so doing leapfrogged much of the uninspired ugly stag of architectural "modernity"—the boxlike buildings and urban spra other countries suffered in the name of progress. The change is visib from coast to coast.

The spirit of Canada today is the avant-garde spirit of the sixtie Nowhere is this more apparent than in Montreal, where the architec tural fantasies of Expo 67 form a fitting backdrop for the city's meta morphosis through intelligent, farsighted planning (a pictorial repo in color on this exciting exhibition will appear in September H&G)

The contrast between the old Montreal and the new is all the mor striking for its close juxtaposition. Stretches of houses with crenellate roof lines, wrought-iron balconies and stairways on Rue St. Denis giv way to the high-rise buildings of Dorchester Boulevard, the outwar and visible sign of Montreal's city-within-a-city—a series of intercon nected above-and-below-ground complexes that will ultimately sprea across the metropolitan heart, linking up the Windsor and Centra Stations, three hotels, office towers, restaurants, department stores, th Stock Exchange, Merchandise Mart, and the Metro through a web o sub-surface pedestrian malls lined with shops, restaurants, movie houses, supermarkets, and even an Instant Theatre that puts on lunch time English-language productions of one-act plays by Pinter, Albee, Shaw, and O'Casey. This giant project, which started with Place Ville Marie on Dorchester Boulevard, will eventually embrace Place Victoria, two blocks south, and Place Bonaventure and Place du Cana da on Dominion Square, the four main beehives for Montreal's white collar workers. The underground malls not only protect the inhabitants from the heat of summer and the icy winds of winter (I discovered the bliss, on a freezing November night, of being able to walk coatless and carefree from my hotel room to a Place Ville Marie restaurant for din ner and on to an art movie afterward), but also go a long way toward solving the traffic problem, for Montreal, like New York, is built on an island, with nowhere to go but up. That it could also go down was due to the happy hesitations of progress: much of the land now being de veloped was the property of the Canadian (Continued on page 24)

The new City Hall, set back in a spacious plaza and unobstructed by other buildings, has become Toronto's most distinctive landmark. Curving towers flanking the mushroom-shaped Council Chamber rise from an upper-level promenade reached by a ramp.

With the stonework cleaned and repaired, the Bonsecours Market Building in Old Montreal regained its nineteenth-century dignity and style. No longer a market, but office space for city officials, it stands in the heart of the restored quarter.

GUERRERO

Contrasts abound in Montreal's architecture. Victorian houses on Crescent Street, festooned with turreted balconies and gingerbread trim, are overshadowed by the towering structure of Sir George Williams University.

Pacific and Canadian National Railroads, a waste of freight yards and tracks.

Not all of the Montreal modernization is as desirable as this, however. Much of the city's charm lies in its Victorian houses, but on Sherbrooke Street, Montreal's Fifth Avenue, many of them have been sacrificed for faceless slab-type apartment houses and hotels (a solid survivor worth noting is the Van Horne mansion on the corner of Stanley Street, home of the descendants of Sir William Van Horne, one of the builders of the Canadian Pacific Railway). But if you turn down the streets between Sherbrooke and Dorchester Boulevard, you will still find many turreted, fanciful old houses that have been converted into boutiques, book stores, restaurants, and antique shops. I stopped in at Crescent Antiques and was delighted to see how the owner, Michel Bourda, had given his row house a new lease on life. The walls are painted strong singing colors - lemon yellow, Directoire red—to show off eighteenth- and nineteenth-century French and English furniture, china, accessories, and prints—some on the second floor arranged in room settings that change whenever a new shipment arrives from Europe.

Montreal's main shopping area, bounded by Dorchester Avenue, Sherbrooke Street, University Avenue, and Guy Street, is compact and easily encompassed on foot. Saint Catherine Street bustles with department stores, movie houses, and one fabulous food shop, Dionne's, an establishment with the restrained cachet of London's Fortnum and Mason and a stock that will drive you wild with hunger or to the nearest restaurant. Sherbrooke Street, sedate and stately, claims the art galleries, Museum of Fine Arts, Holt Renfrew's small and elegant specialty store, and excellent, if expensive, gift and antique shops. The side streets branching off from it—Crescent, Peel, Bishop, Mountain—are full of delights. The China Shop sells complete services of old English china. On Mountain Street, a two-story-high stabile of metal rods and chains by sculptor Robert Roussil (some of whose less startling works are in Mount Royal Park) compels the eye and the feet to discover what lies behind it—Le Drug, a tiny soi-disant drugstore that sells only the most chic items and is companioned by a boutique, a gallery, and a downstairs discothèque called, naturally, Le Drug Hot. Next door is Tournesol, a shop with a good display of Canadian ceramics, weavings, and other crafts.

On the whole, Montreal seems to have skimmed the cream of the crafts. The Canadian Handcrafts Guild has an excellent representative sampling from all over the country—sealskin boots and bags, simple reproductions of pine country furniture, hooked rugs, wood carvings, fabrics, Eskimo soapstone sculptures, weather vanes, and wrought iron. Among the fabrics are stylized Eskimo printed cottons and linens from Cape Dor-

(A enAid dish- ier uses a y wash arm, water action ffective dish- me out com- ly clean, without any hand-rinsing.) en check how it dries. Most dish- ers have a simple heating coil that dries dishes the same as if you stuck them in a hot oven. All this concentrated heat could harm fine china and plastic-. (A KitchenAid dishwasher has a rate heater and fan located outside wash chamber that circulates hot air , under and around each dish. It's very thorough and safe.)

Be sure to consider how long the dishwasher will last, too. This is hard to tell, but here are a few points to consider. Is the dishwasher made of durable materials? (For example, KitchenAid dishwashers have porcelain enamel on the inside and outside of the wash chamber.) Is the motor dependable? (Few manufacturers bother to design their own motors. KitchenAid does. And tests them electronically before assembly.) Is the dishwasher inspected after it's assembled? (Every part is thoroughly checked and every single KitchenAid dishwasher is hooked up for a test run before it leaves the factory.) Is the dishwasher made by specialists? (At KitchenAid it is. KitchenAid is built by the people who have made commercial dishwashers for restaurants, hotels, hospitals, etc., for over 80 years; home dishwashers for nearly 20 years. And many of these original home dishwashers are still going strong.)

Another point. Find out how much the dishwasher holds. You'll probably get an answer in place settings. But look for yourself, too. If you see empty corners or notches cut out of racks, the dishwasher has a lot of wasted space.

But capacity isn't everything. A good dishwasher should be convenient to use, too. See if you can adjust the racks to hold big things like roasters and deep bowls. And you should be able to pull the racks all the way out so you can reach in the back easily. On a portable dishwasher, can you reach the lower rack without unloading or removing the top rack? And watch out if you have to load dishes in a certain way. This gets to be a pain in the neck.

One more thing. You shouldn't have to fuss with dials or knobs with a good dishwasher. So make sure the dishwasher works completely automatically, at the touch of a button.

And if you want your dishes and glasses to dry without any spots get a dishwasher with an Automatic Rinse Agent Dispenser. You'll find this is very important if you live in a hard water area.

Now, if you want to save some time before you start looking, here are two more things you can do. (1) Ask some KitchenAid dishwasher owners how they like their dishwashers. (2) Send this coupon to KitchenAid Dishwashers, Dept. 7DA-8, The Hobart Manufacturing Co., Troy, Ohio 45373. You'll get full details on portables, built-ins, convertible-portables and dishwasher-sink combinations.

set that have deservedly won a design award. Naïve but intensely imaginative, like the black-and-white Eskimo art prints, the motifs are all drawn from nature—little hawks, clusters of goslings, and shoals of seals—and would look fresh and charming in a country or shore house. The prices start at $6.25 a yard for cotton and $8 a yard for linen, all 48 inches wide.

On the second floor, tucked away in a corner, is the Galerie des Artisans, a non-profit gallery supported by the Guild of Crafts which holds monthly exhibitions of work by contemporary artists and craftsmen, many of whom are recent European immigrants or, as they are called with pleasant tact, "new Canadians." It was interesting to see how differently some of the traditional Canadian crafts, such as the wrought-iron work, were interpreted here. I was particularly impressed by David Shaw's lacily perforated iron candleholders of different heights and by his lighting fixture composed of a clear crystal globe suspended by a chain from a slim angled metal rod.

Intrigued by this glimpse of Canadian craftsmanship, I started on a quest for French-Canadian antiques, for the province of Quebec has a tradition of fine cabinetry and wood carving dating back to the seventeenth century when French craftsmen came to the tiny new colony of Ville Marie, Montreal's first settlement. S. Breitman specializes in Canadiana and has a good display of early furniture and church carvings, but I was lucky enough to be invited to a house with a superb collection of Quebec antiques that not even a museum could equal. The house itself is a little, late-eighteenth-century gem that overlooks the river part of the centennial program. The gray stone houses and the classic dome of the Bonsecours Market have been spruced up, and the street in front of the market resurfaced with cobblestones, to keep traffic out and tourists ambulatory. Antique shops and restaurants are moving in fast. Two restaurants, Les Filles du Roy (the "daughters" were women shipped over to marry the early settlers) and L'Auberge Le Vieux St. Gabriel, both in old houses, have made a determined and self-conscious attempt to capture the flavor of the past by costuming the waitresses and serving French Canadian habitant dishes like pea soup and tourtière. More to my taste is Le Petit Havre on St. Vincent Street, one of Montreal's best bistros, a simple establishment where the accent, atmosphere, and food are authentically French. I had a luscious rillettes de Tours, delicate quenelles, gigot roasted to pink perfection, good wine, and cheese. To work off this eminently satisfactory lunch, I investigated Bonsecours Antiques on St. Claude Street, picking up two pewter molds for $5 apiece, and visited the fisherman's chapel of Notre Dame de Bon-Secours and its tiny basement museum where costumed dolls in vitrines depict scenes in the life of the chapel's founder, Marguerite de Bourgeoys. I then strolled west on Notre Dame Street to the Place d'Armes and the nineteenth-century church of Notre Dame. To the right of the church, behind a wall, a stone house with a marvelous old wooden clock on the façade shelters the order of the Gentlemen of St. Sulpice, who were the first seigneurs and priests to arrive in the colony in 1657.

Reverting to the twentieth century, I finished my stay in Montreal with a buffet dinner in Altitude 737, the penthouse lounge-restaurant on top of Place Ville Marie, from which you get a sweeping wide-angle view of the city, and attended a concert at the Place des Arts, Montreal's equivalent of Lincoln Center. The Salle Wilfrid Pelletier, a concert hall-cum-opera house, is not only handsomely but intelligently designed. From the plentiful underground parking space, escalators take you to the box-office level, above which are the foyer, mezzanine, and balcony, richly red-carpeted, lighted by Venini crystal fixtures like great glittering shells, and well-supplied with comfortable seating. In addition to two main bars, there is a series of mini-bars, which, set up in the horseshoe-shaped area around the auditorium, serve a limited selection of drinks. The auditorium doors are kept closed until just before the performance, for inside there are no aisles to interrupt the curving banks of seats, although there is ample leg space to let latecomers pass. And the acoustics are superb.

Toronto

After Montreal, I went to Toronto, just over an hour away by plane and another example of Canada's volte-face. I remembered Toronto from a weekend visit twelve years before as being akin to Glasgow on a Sunday afternoon, devoid of diversion or drinking, sunk in a dreary Calvinist apathy. How different it is now! Much of the credit for Toronto's emancipation goes to the new Canadians, who brought with them from Europe a taste for good food, coffeehouse conversation, and lighthearted gaiety. Toronto can now lay claim to being a swinging city—at least in Yorkville Village, where the hair grows long, the guitar is much in evidence, and discothèques and restaurants draw the late-late crowd. By day, the lures are the gift shops, galleries, boutiques, and antique shops that have blossomed in this two-by-one-block area of converted Victorian houses. The Sobot Gallery at 138 Cumberland Street exhibits and sells the work of contemporary Canadian artists and has a large col tion of posters and graphics. Ad House specializes in late Georg and Regency furniture and ac sories; Robert Dirstein (wh shop was the sheriff's house b in the eighteen fifties when Yo ville really was a village), French and English antiques. tiquing is a productive pursuit Toronto: the Chelsea Shop yield a Bristol blue wine rinser for collection, and hand-colored gravings of nineteenth-centu American scenes by Bartlett, o of Canada's best-known artis These old prints cost only a f dollars and make easily transpo ed gifts for friends back home especially welcome if you can u earth a view of a home town state. Original wood engraving by Bernard Brussel-Smith

"I am not sure that in a great state it is capable of a remedy; nor that the evil is in itself always so great as it is represented.

"Suppose we include in the definition of luxury all unnecessary expense, and then let us consider whether laws to prevent such expense are possible to be executed in a great country, and whether, if they could be executed, our people generally would be happier, or even richer.

"Is not the hope of being one day able to purchase and enjoy luxuries, a great spur to labour and industry?

"May not luxury, therefore, produce more than it consumes, if, without such a spur, people would be, as they are naturally enough inclined to be, lazy and indolent? To this purpose I remember a circumstance.

> "The skipper of a shallop, employed between Cape May and Philadelphia, had done us some small service, for which he refused to be paid. My wife, understanding that he had a daughter, sent her a present of a new-fashioned cap.
> "Three years after, this skipper being at my house with an old farmer of Cape May, his passenger, he mentioned the cap, and how much his daughter had been pleased with it.
> " 'But' (said he) 'it proved a dear cap to our congregation.'
> "How so?"
> " 'When my daughter appeared with it at meeting, it was so much admired, that all the girls resolved to get such caps from Philadelphia, and my wife and I computed that the whole could not have cost less than a hundred pounds.'
> " 'True', (said the farmer) 'but you do not tell all the story. I think the cap was nevertheless an advantage to us; for it was the first thing that put our girls upon knitting worsted mittens for sale at Philadelphia, that they might have wherewithal to buy caps and ribbons there; and you know that the industry has continued, and is likely to continue and increase to a much greater value, and answer better purposes.'
> "Upon the whole, I was more reconciled to this little piece of luxury, since not only the girls were made happier by having fine caps, but the Philadelphians by the supply of warm mittens."

"Poor Richard" put his finger on this simple key to an expanding economy over 200 years ago. So, isn't it strange to find people—well-meaning people—in this country today who still frown on the luxuries most of us work to enjoy? They want the government to restrict the broad range of products and services in the marketplace. And to cut back on advertising because it makes people want things they don't need.

Don't need? Well, of course, no little girl needs a bow in her hair. Yet, Mary Murphy will forever top off the apple of her eye with a ribbon. And where would the ribbon factories be without her? And the ribbon clerks?

It is just this very human desire to add the little frills to our living that has created our jobs and our prosperity . . . the ribbon factories and automobile factories and television factories . . . and the most dynamic economy in man's history. Shouldn't we be careful about how we tinker with the forces that have created all this? Because the simple, troubling truth is, nobody knows for sure how far you can regulate our economy without damaging it.

This book says that

hat she should not reach middle age till she is seventy. And that she uld not lose her ability to attract men until she is well past ninety— HE WILL ONLY BECOME AWARE OF THESE FOUR GREAT NATURAL URCES OF PROLONGED YOUTH, COMPLETELY OVERLOOKED BY % OF AMERICAN WOMEN!

Are These Simple Postures The Key To Victory Over Time Itself?

An ingenious way to re-arrange the way you your face and neck, for a few incredibly- ing minutes every day, that virtually melts years from the appearance of the skin of entire upper body. (You'll learn why this e posture works such breath-taking wonders e paragraphs below.)

A new way to breathe—that purifies your n of the internal poisons that keep you con- ly half-ill today, and that eat away your n like acid.

A new way to achieve truly deep sleep— recharges your body like a battery every , and keeps accumulated exhaustion from ng you old.

And perhaps most important, and most ing of all, a new way to fight the never- ting forces of gravity that cause the muscles ur face and body to sag deeper and deeper day.

This posture alone—this simple, 4,000-year- "Effortless Exercise" that actually reverses ffect of gravity on your body, and causes it m up your muscles instead of collapse them n give you a slimmer, younger body over- t, and for the next fifty years to come. You'll rstand why when you read the paragraphs w.)

ese, then, are the startling, almost-unbeliev- promises this book makes to you. But you realize that to gain these benefits, you must discard every idea about your body that you been taught since you were a child - and be ared to look at "age" and "youth" and lth" and "beauty" through entirely new eyes.

essence, what you are going to learn, in very first reading of this fascinating book, s:

ver 4,000 years ago, in the Far East, some of wisest men and women who ever lived dis- red that "old age" was nothing more than a se—actually just another ill of the body, to ught as any other ill.

o do this—to fight this "ageing-disease"— developed a series of age-delaying tech- es called Yoga.

ga means Youth. Yoga techniques bring youth, and prolong youth.

ou can see living proof of these facts every in India, China and Tibet. There Yoga be- rs have used these techniques to live to fan- ages (close to 100 years), and still retain ally the appearance of young women.

ese women have achieved "Super Feminin- At the ages of 60 and 70 and 80, they have e physical magnetism—are far more attrac- to men—than the hordes of "half-feminine" en who may be 50 or 60 years younger.

Once again, this book gives you the techniques these women use—but now adapted and simplified for Western women, with all the religion and philosophy that were evolved along with them stripped away.

And now ready to go to work for you—overnight—to take each part of your body in turn, and repair the tragic damage done to it by strain and time.

Like this—

The First Step: To Give Your Face Back Its Youthful Bloom.

This book says that there is a very simple reason why the skin of your face and neck becomes thin, drawn, pale and wrinkled after thirty:

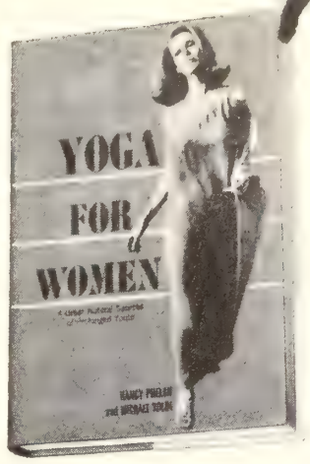
Because once you reach that critical age, your heart can no longer automatically pump enough nourishing blood uphill to your face, to keep it as smooth and plump and young as it was when you were a teen-ager.

It's exactly as if you stopped feeding water to a potted plant—and then watched the leaves of that plant crinkle up and begin to die.

No beauty parlor on earth—no face cream no matter how expensive—can ever correct this lack of internal nourishment. But Yoga can. It does it in a few exhilarating minutes every day—by showing you an ingenious way to re-arrange the way you hold your face and neck, that automatically causes your body to pour nourishing blood into every fiber of your face.

This simple posture is so easy to accomplish that, for the first few days, you may not be able to believe that it can really be doing you that much good. But then—when you wake up one morning and find your husband studying your face in silent admiration—you will realize the incredible potency of this "youth-restoring technique" practiced by two hundred generations of Eastern women.

And it's just the beginning . . .



How To Sit Your Way To A Beautiful Body

Now you begin the re-education of every contour-shaping muscle in your body—and the elimination of the ugly and deadly fat that has plagued you for years—but this time without such extreme measures as crash diets, sweat boxes, back-breaking calisthenics, or pills or other artificial devices of any kind.

In essence, what you are going to do with this book is learn a series of "Effortless Exercises" (many of which take less than a single minute each). These, again, are simple postures and rhythmic gestures that re-charge your energy bank every morning rather than exhaust it . . . and that beautify the feminine contours of your body, without creating a single bulging muscle (as Western exercises do) to make you look like a man.

One of these postures, for example, (done simply by sitting in a special way on the floor) firms your legs, calves, inner thighs—all in the same moment.

Another lifts and preserves the bust. Another flattens the stomach and slims the hips. Still another prevents flabby arms.

And (in our opinion, the most important) still another takes the "old-age stiffness and perpetual ache" out of your spine, and gives you the cat-like grace and freedom to enjoy the life of a young girl.

And—at exactly the same time—

Vital Health Centers Of Your Body That Have Slept For Years —Are Now Gently Massaged Into Blazing New Vitality . . .

Now these "Effortless Exercises" begin to work their magic—for probably the first time in your entire life—on the internal glands and organs that either keep you young 'til ninety (if you keep them healthy and strong) or (if you allow them to wither up from disuse) turn you into an old woman at thirty.

For example:

Here is an incredibly gentle posture that virtually doubles the amount of circulation that reaches the vital nerve centers in the back of your head and neck—and thus puts you to sleep faster and deeper than you have known in years. (You'll be amazed at the energy with which you bounce out of bed the next morning.)

Here is a one-minute technique that turns ordinary air into the most potent revitalizer in the world. (Try it for exactly 60 seconds when you're exhausted from housework; see how it enables you to out-dance your teen-age daughter till dawn.)

Here's how to flush internal poisons right out of your body. Clear your complexion. Purify your blood. Get overnight relief from those vague aches and pains that drain youth like a dripping faucet.

Here is a special posture for the woman who is beginning to lose her animal attractiveness. Whose husband is losing interest in her. And who wants him to gasp in delight just a few short nights from the time she first opens this book.

Read It From Cover To Cover Entirely At Our Risk.

One final word of warning: If you expect a huge, weighty, philosophical tome here, you are completely mistaken. This book has been carefully cut down to the bare practical essentials. There is not a word in it that does not give you a physical benefit immediately. Therefore, even in the special deluxe version we send you, it is only 128 pages. You can finish it in a single weekend. The new youth and beauty and physical attractiveness it gives you will last a lifetime.

The complete cost of this book is only $5.98. It is a book for women who mean business about restoring and preserving the most priceless possession they will ever have—their youth. If you mean business, why not send in the No Risk Coupon today.

There is a way to hit long, straight balls AUTOMATICALLY every time

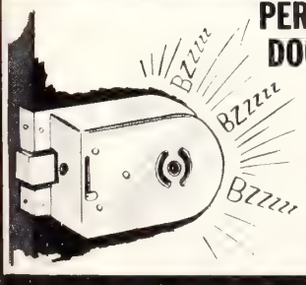
THIS IS IT!

You have to try this to see for yourself! And you can do it on our money-back guarantee. This tee gives you almost unbelievable results. Long straight drives every time!



It's simple because the tee is based on aero-dynamic principles that prevent the lateral spin which causes hooks or slicing. The tee cups your ball (see illustration). When the club hits the tee all the power behind it goes into getting the ball away and no matter where the club connects, the power goes behind the ball, gets it away faster, straighter. You may hit a few yards to right or left. BUT YOU WON'T HOOK OR SLICE.

You'll get off drives that will amaze you for distance. You'll hit truer shots—this tee makes golfers out of beginners and club champs out of week end golfers. What's more, it saves you money on balls. You don't mark them up, you don't cut or mar them. You don't lose them so easily—and it speeds up your game.

Of course you have to try them for yourself. Order at our risk. If you are not completely satisfied—if you are not absolutely delighted with what it does for your game—return for a full refund.

Tru Drive Golf Tees are only $1.98 for pkg. of 5. (They last for years if you don't lose them). But get enough for your partners and friends. Special offer for 3 sets—$5.75 postpaid. #667. Order now—impress your golf partners next week-end!

Little larger than a pack of cigarettes. Needs no electricity, no wiring. Neatly designed styrene case. Foolproof—tamperproof, and only $3.95 postpaid. Two for $7.75. #663

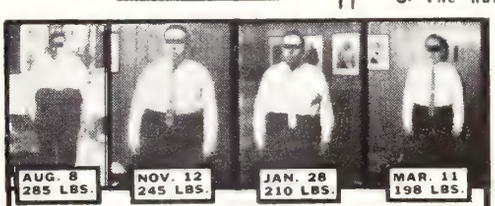
SIDNEY PETRIE,
CLINICAL OBESIOLOGIST.
PRACTICE LIMITED TO PHYSICIAN-REFERRED PATIENTS

From the consultation room of a world-famous New York Obesity Specialist comes this important news of a weight-reducing technic which, after eight years' scientific testing on fat men and women of all ages, brings new hope to all who have been disappointed by strict diets, phony gimmicks, preposterous promises. This physician-endorsed plan actually . . .

RELIEVES YOUR BODY OF 15, 25, 50 LBS. OF UGLY FAT:

ASK almost any physician, nutritionist or dietician what causes obesity, and you'll get the same old answer: CALORIES! Then take a close look at your own friends and relatives . . . some short, some tall, some fat . . . some who are just naturally skinny. Now, think about what and how—and especially how much—these people eat. Can you honestly say all the fat people you know eat more or more often than those who seemingly were "born slender"?

Of course not. Many (if not most) overweight people don't really eat very much; and, agonizing over every calorie, they seldom enjoy anything they eat. Yet naturally skinny men and women often have voracious appetites; they eat and drink what they like, whenever they like, but never put on an ounce. Does this prove that calories really don't count? No. But it does indicate that calories aren't all that counts, that you can have a slim, trim body without obsessive calorie counting.



Eight years ago, a qualified professional, famed Obesity Specialist, Sidney Petrie, delved into this enigma of why naturally skinny people stay slender in spite (or because?) of what they eat. His years of clinical practice and careful research have recently revealed a hidden nutritional factor — several colleagues call it "the most significant obesity-control discovery in half a century!" — which is, right now, beginning to change the shape of overweight America.

Ruthless and Often Bizarre – Even MARTINIS & WHIPPED CREAM!

In layman's language, Petrie calls this vital biochemical breakthrough, simply, "the carbo-cal" — an isolated caloric factor which is actually a "control mechanism" by which the human body can gain or lose weight. This carbo-cal factor is not only the incredibly effective key to sustained weight loss — but also a ruthless and often bizarre demolisher of long-held dietary beliefs. According to carbo-cal theory, for instance, you would rapidly lose weight eating frankfurters, fried eggs and plenty of butter! You could grow slim, stay slender, on such fare as custard, Bavarian cream, sauerbraten and filet mignon! You could even unwind after a hard day with MARTINIS & WHIPPED CREAM — which, incidentally, is the surprising title of Sidney Petrie's even more surprising new diet-destroyer of a book. This is the astonishing bestseller that reveals the whole carbo-cal reducing technic . . . a volume that turns theory into practice, fatties into stay-thins.

Last Hope for "Hopeless" Cases

In his New York offices, Petrie annually treats scores of "hopeless" obesity cases, many referred to him by other specialists, often doctors who have vainly tried conventional diets, drugs, exercises and even psycho-therapy. He is regarded as one of the country's four or five most highly respected obesity practitioners. His popular lectures to lay and professional groups . . . his articles in newspapers, magazines and scientific journals . . . his much-acclaimed radio and tv appearances . . . all these have made Expert Petrie world-famous as the "last hope" for fat, unhappy, desperate men and women who seemingly can't lose weight. Does his carbo-cal method work? Case history after case history— a total weight loss of over 21,500 pounds!— give overwhelming evidence of success.

DRAMATIC PROOF of carbo-cal's effectiveness is shown here in these documented, unretouched photos of Philip H., New York City printer, who lost 87 lbs. in just 32 weeks. How much do you want to lose?

ASK YOUR DOCTOR

Yes, consult your own physician, ask HIM about carbo-cal's efficacy. Or contact Sidney Petrie directly, 441 West 49th Street, New York, N.Y., Tel. LT 1-3700. He or one of his staff will answer any question specifically relating to the carbo-cal technic. (PROFESSIONAL ETHICS, OF COURSE, PROHIBIT PERSONAL CONSULTATION OF ANY KIND.)

Unconventional but Irrefutable

The carbo-cal technic, admittedly unconventional, nonetheless produces safe, rapid and usually permanent loss of superfluous fatty tissues and excess poundage. Petrie's entire carbo-cal methodology, you see, is soundly premised on irrefutable biochemical-metabolic scientific research. Consider these transcendently important facts:

1. Most foods contain THREE DIFFERENT TYPES of calories in the form of three basic nutritional body "fuels."
2. The absolute caloric values of each of these substances are NOT assimilated by the body in the same manner, at the same rate, and to the same degree.
3. Assimilated calories are NOT necessarily proportional to a food's bulk, weight or delectability.
4. Neither absolute nor assimilated caloric values are a reliable guide to a food's HUNGER-SUPPRESSING and APPETITE-APPEASING capabilities.
5. The human body normally loses permanent weight only by CATABOLICALLY "EATING" ITS OWN FAT instead of consuming the available calories of ingested food.
6. Laboratory, clinical and empirical evidence demonstrates conclusively that humans differ markedly in their METABOLIC, and therefore CATABOLIC, activity.
7. Reliable scientific studies, dating back to 1862, support the conclusion that QUALITATIVE CALORIC FACTORS are a much more important PRACTICAL CONSIDERATION in obesity than total calories alone.

Bestseller You Don't Read!

But what can carbo-cal mean to you? First, the loss of 15, 25, 50 pounds or more of ugly fat — swiftly, pleasantly, without starvation diets, without dangerous drugs, without tiresome exercises, without preposterous gimmicks. Sidney Petrie's unusual carbo-cal method quickly has you reducing, never lets you start backsliding — and all the while you're eating more and better-satisfying foods than you eat now. Willpower? Just enough determination to start, enough good sense to return the coupon below without money for your Free Preview Copy of the big carbo-cal guidebook! And please remember, the carbo-cal technic, outlined in Sidney Petrie's bestseller, is your blueprint for ACTION — no dull, boring excess reading matter. In fact, here is a book you'll never have to "read"! Simply by browsing through its 268 revealing pages, skipping here and there as you wish, you'll be able to begin your carbo-cal reducing program in only 20 or 30 minutes.

All Fried Foods — Except One

But get ready for a few surprises. Weight-boosting villains, for instance, lurk in such "diet foods" as skim milk, carrot sticks, and — of all things — melba toast! You'll find out how carbo-cal is linked to better skin tone, resistance to colds, freedom from minor aches and pains, low cholesterol, increased virility and a 15% to 25% longer life span! You'll discover you can eat every kind of fried food – except one. You'll agree that carbo-cal is nothing short of a weight-watcher's revolution — and an inspiring, confidence-building revelation, too, which shows you . . .

- How to lose weight on three big meals a day, without counting or measuring anything.
- Why you must never leave the table hungry to be slim; why you must eat heartily to stay slim.
- Why special recipies are unnecessary, why special food preparation is wasted — as long as you follow one simple rule.
- Why doctors may recommend carbo-cal to gland-disturbed patients.
- How you can dine at the best restaurants, limited only by your pocketbook.

As you might imagine, Sidney Petrie's carbo-cal weight-reducing method has evoked much acclaim from nutritional authorities, some of whom have used carbo-cal to rid themselves of unwanted pounds. Its discoverer's professional reputation, its basis in scientific fact, its documented effectiveness have earned for carbo-cal wide acceptance ... "It can be possible," comments Dr. Milton C. Kemp, M.D., "to eat more and shed pounds. There is nothing off your list. You will be learning how to eat what you should eat. You will enjoy food more and live longer to enjoy food."

Free Preview Opportunity

If you're even slightly overweight, if your bathroom scale and bedroom mirror tell the same unpleasant story, if last season's clothes seem to have "shrunk" a bit, if you're really concerned about your health and appearance, then you'll return the coupon now, for a Free Preview Copy of MARTINIS & WHIPPED CREAM, the bestselling carbo-cal guidebook. It's yours, without risk, to have, to use — to start LOSING WEIGHT with! — for over two full weeks. Yes, you send no money, incur no risk or obligation . . . this big carbo-cal guidebook is SENT FREE. Memocord's XJE IV, the self-contained, sub-miniature voice recorder has taken Europe by storm. Now it's yours to try, to have and use absolutely FREE. No purchase necessary.

THE XJE IV, at long last, is within the reach of most U.S. executives. The price—about $100 not too long ago—is now reduced to only $79.95. And the world-respected Viktor Stuzzi MEMOCORD unit (the original pocket voice recorder) is now better-performing, easier-operating, more ruggedly-durable than ever before.

GREAT FOR HOME USE, TOO!

Yes, every member of the family will find lots of good uses for the XJE IV:

- ✓ MOM, for recipes, menus, messages, shopping lists, club minutes.
- ✓ SIS, for theme ideas, important dates, style notes, daily checklists.
- ✓ BROTHER, for homework assignments, phone conversations, sports data.
- ✓ DAD, too, can use it at home for business notes he won't lose or forget!

Best of all, you can now TRY THIS REVOLUTIONARY "MEMORY CELL" FREE, before you even consider buying it.

Only a trifle larger than a pack of cigarettes, the XJE IV is a completely self-contained "thinking dynamo"—just a whisper away from your most important, most profitable thoughts and ideas. How many times have you forgotten something that would have made you money? Or would have prevented you from losing money?

How often have you wished you had verbatim notes on this or that meeting or business conference? What executive hasn't had to live through the tangled nightmare of some costly, confusing misunderstanding—which could have been prevented if adequate records of who said what (when, where and how) were available? When was the last time you "lost" an opportunity simply because you had no convenient way to record its concept and anatomy? Who hasn't suddenly come up with "the answer"—while driving along an express highway at 60 mph? And lost it by the time the next stop rolled around?

Why didn't you save time by phoning long distance for that list of specifications—too long to "take down"? No sir, not if you own an XJE IV. (Yes, it comes complete with its own super-sensitive induction telephone mike which picks up both ends of any phone conversation!)

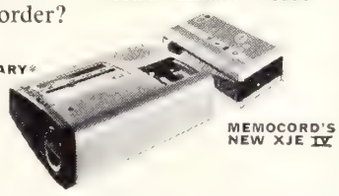
"SECRET WEAPON" IN YOUR ARSENAL OF SUCCESS

Andrew Carnegie, the steel multi-millionaire, was once advised to "list" everything that needed doing, every day, and then set about getting things done in order of their importance—carrying over undone tasks, adding new ones, periodically evaluating his progress toward a pre-determined goal. This simple system, said Carnegie, allowed him to be more productive, more directional (and therefore more successful) than his toughest competitors. Imagine what old Andrew could have done with an XJE IV Memory Cell!

A recent university study of alumni who succeeded in business, in professional work, in government, revealed that the major common denominator of "money success" was the knack of "organizing" information so that (1) it didn't have to clutter up busy thought channels, and (2) it could be retrieved immediately. Following a close second was the ability to communicate facts and ideas accurately, quickly, simply, to associates and especially subordinates.

In realistic terms of career advancement and income escalation, don't you owe it to yourself and your family to at least try the MEMOCORD XJE IV. It could be your "secret weapon" of SUCCESS!

"Extremely pleased . . . appreciate your sending to us three more if still available."
—MILTON KAPLAN, Laurel Planning & Redevelopment Corp., Laurel, Md.



"The Memocord just saved a client by 'nailing down' one single vital detail, which otherwise would have been neglected."
—WM. ARCHENHOLD, Flesher Adv. Agency, Denver, Colo.

"Skeptical . . . I very seldom order by mail. But am more than pleased with XJE IV. Especially this miniature unit's performance. Unusual to get such good voice reproduction from a machine so small, at a price even smaller."
—EARL BRENN, Huntington Laboratories, Inc., Huntington, Ind.

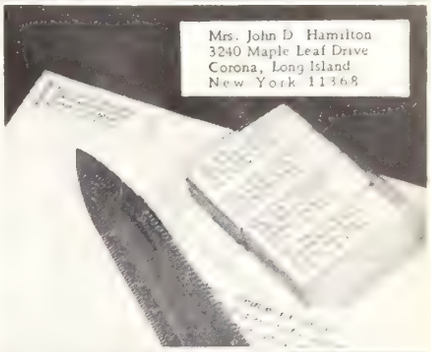
BOGUS DIAMONDS

Diamond prices are ridiculous. What we're offering is a new stone that sparkles like a diamond and is almost as hard as a diamond.

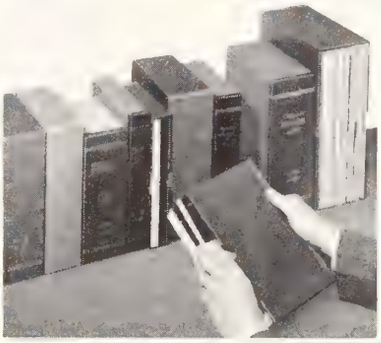
These bogus diamonds are called Caribbean Gems, and they sell for a fraction of what real diamonds cost. $10 per carat as opposed to over $1000 per carat for diamond.

The nice thing about Caribbean Gems is that only a trained jeweler can tell these bogus diamonds from the real thing.

Caribbean Gems are so hard and so long lasting that we can offer this special guarantee. Anytime you'd like to trade up to a larger size, just send back your old Caribbean Gem for a full trade-in. No money lost.



Send for our free catolog.



All of our bogus diamonds come in 14 Karat gold settings. And we'd like to show you what they look like.

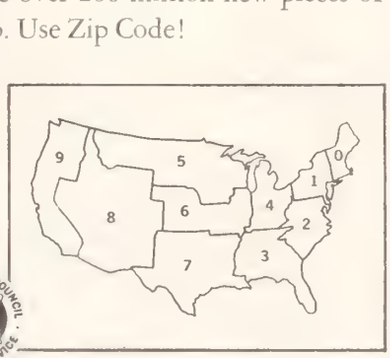
Are you holding up the U.S. Mail?

It happens every day!

People hold up mail service for themselves and for everyone else by not using Zip Code on their mail.

Their mail has to be sorted and re-sorted several times along its route. A single unzipped letter can slow up the mail at 6 post offices!

But when your letter has Zip Code, postal workers can sort it faster and send it more directly to its destination. They can also use modern electronic machines that "read" Zip numbers and sort mail fifteen times faster than was possible before.



So remember:

1. Always add Zip Code to every address you write to. If you don't know the number, call your post office or look it up in their Zip Code Directory. Local Zips can be found on the Zip Map in the business pages of your phone book.
2. Add Zip Code to your return address, too. That makes it easy for others to Zip their mail to you.

The post office must handle over 200 million new pieces of mail a day. Don't hold it up. Use Zip Code!

HOW ZIP CODE WORKS

Suppose the Zip Code is 60635. The "6" says it goes to the Midwest. The "06" narrows it down to Chicago. The last two digits—"35"—pinpoint the local post office. This eliminates many handling procedures. The letter is sorted faster, and sent more directly to its destination.

TODAY EVERYONE IS COOKING

Some people, after a day's work, take to their kitchens for a change of pace that refreshes them like a dip in the surf. Some people cook for themselves, others only for company. Some cook when they have to, others when they want to. But today there is hardly anyone over the age of twelve who never cooks.

Some cooks insist on a battery of special tools and appliances, while others claim they can produce any culinary effect they want with one knife, one wooden spoon, and any kind of pot that is big enough to hold the ingredients. Between these two extremes, you will find an enormous range of personal cooking styles and requirements. And now that the arid antiseptic, impersonal cook's domain is a thing of the quite distant past, the kitchen reflects the approach to cooking of the person who reigns there—in its plan, in its equipment, in its decoration. Kitchens have become as personal as bedrooms or private studies, and since persons vary ad infinitum, so do kitchens. For proof, see our cover, then read the stories of seven other kitchens and how they grew, starting on the next page.

PROFESSIONAL COOKS COOK

"I still can't resist a new find," says Paula Peck, who performs culinary wonders amidst a fascinating store of utensils

Paula Peck cooks constantly—for her husband, James D. Peck, for her two ravenous teen-age sons, for frequent dinner guests. In addition, she is a professional tester of recipes, has written two successful cook books, one of them on baking, and there is another baking book rising slowly in her and her publisher's minds. Her kitchen, left, has been variously described as a museum of Yankee artifacts and a temple to the gods of food. Everyone loves it, especially Mrs. Peck, to whom atmosphere is important.

"I love the look of marble, wood, and tile," she says, "and I like my collections to be out where I can see them. I am always on the lookout for antique utensils and bowls and platters. I hunt for them not only in antique and junk shops, but in hardware stores where I once found, for instance, a couple of never-used but very old cherry pitters." Her antique apple corers and peelers, marvelous little many-geared iron machines, are used often.

Her big working equipment includes an enamel six-burner restaurant stove with two ovens and a waist-high ceramic-lined broiler that she can't praise enough, plus a freezer and two refrigerators, one of which is used primarily for storing home-roasted nuts, pâtés, and other things that can be refrigerated for long periods. Mrs. Peck had all her counters topped with ceramic tile except for two butcher-block surfaces. The 48-inch round French marble table where the Pecks eat family meals and entertain at small dinner parties is also much used as a work surface, especially for kneading dough. For rolling dough, Mrs. Peck spreads out a length of ship's canvas.

A precise home economist might object that the kitchen's layout (in an oddly shaped room remade from a small kitchen and an adjoining bedroom) is far from the last word in kitchen design: the sink and stove are around the corner from each other, neither is lighted from above, and the freezer and one refrigerator open the wrong way. But Mrs. Peck answers happily, "I don't care. It works."

TEEN-AGERS COOK

As long as they "clean up afterward," Blaine Mallory and Lainey Abbott, both fifteen, are given free run of the Mallory kitchen

The indisputable fact that most teen-agers are ravenous 99 per cent of their days lures an increasing number of them into the kitchen, not only to raid the icebox, but to try their own hands at cooking. For today, as the Blaine Wright Mallorys' red-haired daughter Blaine says, "Cooking is such fun. All those mixes. And I love to use Mother's appliances." As a result, the inviting sunshine yellow kitchen, right, in the Mallorys' eighteenth-century farmhouse in New Canaan, Conn., is rarely unoccupied. Whenever Mrs. Mallory, an accomplished gourmet cook herself, is not at the stove, Blaine and her constant companion Lainey Abbott, take over the kitchen, above, to cook for themselves and Blaine's eight-year-old brother Ben. His job, between tasting, is to set the table in the bay window.

The girls' culinary experiments range from instant concoctions such as their favorite chocolate marshmallow milk shakes whipped up in the blender to a full-scale weekend breakfast of pancakes or waffles and sausages. As a rule, Blaine prefers to make things at which her mother does not already excel—cakes, for instance, or pizza. Where did the girls learn to cook? Surprisingly enough, from their older brothers. They also learn as they go along, by fearlessly trying out a new dessert, say, and by working in the fully equipped yet uncomplicated kitchen that puts them at ease and instills an urge to cook simply by its attractive appearance, the achievement of interior designer Joan Miller Carrillo. The kitchen provides another tremendous asset for teen-age cooks—work counters on three sides that allow plenty of elbowroom.

WORKING MOTHERS COOK

"Our kitchen-family room," says Mrs. Harvey Rambach, "is just right for my weekend cooking and the girls' parties."

After living for some years in their New York apartment with a cramped kitchen "no one wanted to be in" and a butler's pantry "no one used," the Harvey Rambachs remodeled with the help of designer Julia Gosliner and got the cheerful dual-purpose room they wanted in a remarkably small space. (The dividing wall they removed formerly stood at the left end of the dining table, right.) Mrs. Rambach, a full-time editor, has a cook during the week, but likes to cook weekends, "if I don't have to cook by myself." While family or friends idle at the butcher-block dining table, which is also a part-time work surface, she happily turns out her favorite dishes in the super-efficient U-shaped working area, above.

When the family is eating, they can dim the work area by means of a rheostat. The older girls, thirteen and sixteen, like to cook for friends, and often the kitchen is the scene of a teen-age party: a buffet is set up there so that the dining room can be turned over to dancing.

MEN COOK

Harold Ray Jackson thinks, "Every room should be a living room, including the kitchen."

When Mr. Jackson recently remodeled an old Pound Ridge, N. Y., livery stable-garage, with the help of designer Josephine von Miklos, he put his antique shop on the ground floor, his living quarters above. All his rooms, including the kitchen, were carpeted, and he scattered oriental rugs everywhere, even in front of the stove. But that proves no maintenance problem to Mr. Jackson. "I never saw a good cook who was disorganized or messy. I clean up as I go." Like the dining room, the kitchen is paneled with birch plywood accented with molding, stained and waxed. "I don't want to jar the eye when it moves from one room to the other."

He purposely made the kitchen small. "I have all the equipment and work space I need, and the dining room for extra storage." His cooking battery is small, too: two knives—one big, one small—a few wooden spoons and forks, enameled iron pots. But the product, guests testify, is impressive, especially when it is Mr. Jackson's special Portuguese seafood stew.

BARBRA STREISAND COOKS

The actress' passion for food and antiques prompted her to create a kitchen memorable for "its great smells, its Victorian mood."

In her Manhattan apartment, Barbra Streisand, wife of actor Elliott Gould and mother of a baby boy, Jason, employs a full-time housekeeper-cook. But whenever her own crowded, irregular schedule allows (she is now filming "Funny Girl," to be followed by "Hello, Dolly!"), she loves nothing better than to slip into her kitchen, right, and "try out some fantastic recipe." Not in the least interested in the prosaic (pot roasts and such she leaves up to her housekeeper), she tackles such varied concoctions as chestnut pudding, an exotically prepared vegetable, or chocolate soufflé. But because she is fiercely professional and believes in perfectionism in everything, she modestly insists she is not a cook. Nevertheless, she equipped and decorated her kitchen entirely on her own with all the instincts of an expert.

Small as the room is—a drawback she can do nothing about—it is a splendidly complete cooking center, boasting an ample batterie de cuisine: copper-bottomed or French enameled cast-iron pots and casseroles; a special pan for omelettes which she makes with skill, often for breakfast; a collection of classic cooking aids ranging from a mortar and pestle to a prized set of stainless steel French chopping knives. And good organization compensates for lack of space. In the old-fashioned ceiling-high cupboards, supplies are arranged according to a system as strict as that in a supermarket. Spices are lined up in full view near the stove. Appliances are stored in a special cupboard, except for the frequently used blender, which is kept within easy reach on an open shelf.

Yet, for all its no-nonsense planning, the little kitchen has an engagingly warm feeling, "completely non-clinical" as Miss Streisand puts it. Since it was old-fashioned to begin with, she decided to emphasize this quality with Victoriana. She covered one wall with red patent leather, had a new floor of red tiles laid to match, then covered the remaining walls, ceiling, and cupboard fronts with Paisley wallpaper "because I adore Paisley." Her prized finishing touches—the Tiffany lamp, the old theatre prints, and the antique clock and apple peeler on the wall—she found rummaging in Manhattan antique shops.

A TEXAS BACHELOR COOKS

"Cooking is a snap, if you don't make it a problem," says Richard E. Hudson, who runs his kitchen like a captain of industry

The bright blue-and-white galley-plan kitchen in Richard Hudson's townhouse in Houston, above, is kept constantly shipshape by his housekeeper. "But I enjoy good food," says the tall, tanned, quick-moving ex-marine pilot, "and I've never felt that what I liked to eat was beyond my fixing. Take Eggs Benedict. You pick up some hollandaise and truffles and a couple of slices of ham at the country club, fix a couple of eggs and English muffins, and there you have it." Most of the time Mr. Hudson's kitchen has the executive's clean-desk look. He chose the colors because they looked clean (he has the natural male preference for blue), and he likes everything kept out of sight when not in use. When he decides to cook for guests, his pièce de résistance is usually steak. "It's not just because Texas is a beef-raising state, but I don't think you can serve anyone better food than a steak." In bad weather he uses the grill in the range top. But usually he broils steaks in the atrium, left, where he has a gas-fired barbecue. "It's infallible. If you want a charcoal flavor, you just toss some charcoal on the gas flames." The kitchen was designed by architect Preston Bolton.

When the Paul Rubinsteins remodeled their New York apartment kitchen, it was Mr. Rubinstein, right, who took charge—designing the work area, above, selecting the appliances, choosing the colors. The young husband, father, advertising man, dedicated chef-at-home, and author of the forthcoming The Night Before Cookbook is a hard-working culinary purist who insists on using the best ingredients. His wife, who calls herself "chief chopper and second taster," says "Paul was not only born with a silver spoon in his mouth—it was filled with pâté de foie gras." His father is pianist Artur Rubinstein, his mother is an inspired cook, and he was raised on international haute cuisine.

Mr. Rubinstein, who prepares two or three dinners a week and often "cooks all weekend," has collected an enormous supply of equipment. His favorite aids include the radiant-heat broiler of the gas range, an electric hot tray "used at every meal," carbon steel chef's knives in four sizes, a porcelain-lined double boiler "that never sticks," a cast-aluminum omelette pan. "And I could buy six more expensive pots tomorrow and justify every one." The kitchen was installed by Julian Hess.

THE LOOK OF A GARDEN, FIVE FLOORS UP

About a year ago, Miss Joan Bennett, an actress responsible for much of the silver screen's long-term sheen, moved from a temporary apartment in New York City to a permanent one—a transition she calls moving "from the city to the country." Although she is a native New Yorker, years of Californian exurbia had dimmed her memory of city soot, and a renewed acquaintance with it only strengthened her regard for the old saw about cleanliness and her determination to live with a "country look." Her apartment is sizable, a bit old-fashioned (she likes that), but in its found state, not very well planned. That fault was soon corrected, however, with the help of her old friend, interior designer Airey Mays of Mays/Pagan. A wall between two bedrooms was removed to give Miss Bennett a large bed-sitting room. A tiny bedroom became a dressing room. A battery of ponderous doors between foyer and dining room were taken down and the opening walled up to create complete privacy for what is now a dining-library. A new kitchen was installed, and the apartment was ready to become a flower bed.

Miss Bennett loves color, particularly green and shocking pink, but yellow is her "therapy." She works very hard at her current television series, gets home at seven in the evening much in need of cheer, and receives it, as though she had suddenly walked into a sunny day, from the daffodil yellow walls of her living room and library—part of the whole pastoral ambiance created by a welter of flowered fabrics, a green and white treillage wallpaper in the foyer, a wealth of flowers and shrubs, and air sprayed with attar of roses. Properly picked up, she then retires to her pink and green bedroom to have her dinner on a tray and study her lines for the next day's bout before the cameras. (Continued)

"Practically everything in the apartment I've had for years," says Miss Bennett, "except those little French planters we made into table for the green settee. There aren't any curtains to speak of, just short white shirred things behind the flowered shades. Those I lov They look gardenish and hi the view, which is disenchan The rug was woven in China years ago. It's silk an wool and kind of indestructi Four children grew up with it. The lamps by the window came from China, to but the sofa lamps are Delft.

"There aren't any windows in the foyer, and since I can't bear gloom, it had to have artificial respiration—all with wallpaper—to make it look like a sort of trellisy gazebo. After the wall was knocked out, my bedroom was easy. Just pink and green and my old bed re-done. It used to have a canopy, but New York is no place for fancy dust catchers. All those miniatures in the pink frame are my family, and they are dust catchers, but I don't mind. That's my grandfather in the center: he was a matinee idol like my father. Between the two of them, they left us all stagestruck. Not that we cared. It's a difficult heritage, but I think I'd rather have it than all the tea in China."

When Miss Bennett first went to California to live, she took with her two birch trees. "I was afraid I'd be homesick," she says. On the return journey, and for the same reason, she left no dear or familiar possessions behind. Most of her furniture is French, antique, and now newly covered. Some of it is painted white—"a pang, but it's fresh air"—and all of it has found a home. One bedroom, below left, doubles as a guest room and a haven for her youngest daughter, Shelley, one of Vassar's prettier daisies. The bedroom-into-dressing-room, below right, holds three walls of deep closets, two of them for dresses, beautifully ordered. The third is a business-like archive full of everything from play scripts to recipes, which Miss Bennett collects avidly. Because she is a gourmet, she has a French cook, but she is quite capable of descending upon the kitchen to turn out, in elegant succession, a perfect hollandaise, a leg of lamb roasted in a gingery marinade, and a strawberry mousse flecked, like marble, with the green of fresh chopped mint.

A NEW DECORATIVE DELIGHT

worthy of Scheherazade

Flowing patterns of flowers, leaves, branches, and scrolls, fancifully intertwined, have been known for centuries as arabesques. They are also a prominent element in Arabesque—an ebullient, this-minute style of decoration and furniture arrangement which H&G first spotted eighteen months ago. Derived from the great Arabic-Islamic arts of the Middle Ages, Arabesque has never been either wholly Arabic or wholly Islamic. In its heyday it spread from the eastern shores of the Mediterranean westward across North Africa to Spain and eastward across Iraq and Persia to India, gathering and absorbing indigenous ideas as it went. Periodically, it has turned up in the West—in the India prints of seventeenth-century England, in the Paisley shawls of the Industrial Revolution, in the Turkish corners of the Eighteen Nineties. Currently the style is blossoming again in brand new interpretations, strictly of today.

Pattern is the crux of it—patterned fabrics used lavishly from ceiling to floor and wall to wall; small patterns used in multiple as if they were varying textures. But pattern is not all. Arabesque brings with it a different set of proportions—rooms that look loftier because everything in them is low, spaces that look larger because of continuous seating all around the walls. An important element is the couch; invariably piled high with big, soft, comfortably shiftable pillows. To these classic characteristics, contemporary accents have been added: bold stripes, animal spots, and the peppery geometrics of Africa south of the Sahara; big splashes of white; grass mattings and bamboo; an accessory or two of Victoriana or Art Nouveau. The variations are endless, but in its concentrated form, Arabesque is most adaptable to small spaces—alcoves, corners, small rooms.

The familiar "pine cone" or curlicued teardrop that we call the "Paisley" motif evolved in the seventeenth century in both Persian decorative art and the Kashmir shawls that were copied en masse on the first machine looms of Paisley, Scotland

A contemporary overscaled Paisley pattern splashed with India's lotus blossoms makes a lively background for Victoriana and other antiques in the George Axelrods' dining room in Beverly Hills, Calif. Lined up on the mantel are some of Mr. Axelrod's cache of 150 Victorian shaving mugs which his wife —interior designer Joan Axelrod of Staircase, Inc.— sometimes borrows to hold flowers on the dining table. She designed the buffet, left, by incorporating a 48-bottle wine rack into an old serving table.

One facet of Arabesque reflects the tents of the desert nomads, which were furnished almost entirely with rugs to keep out the desert sands—and great heaps of pillows to solace weary travelers

A tent created by hanging the walls and ceiling of an alcove with Arabesque fabrics makes an inviting retreat at one end of a room in fashion designer Gaston Berthelot's New York apartment. Hung loosely, the fabrics also serve as a practical mask for architectural defects—two doors, an off-center window opening to an air shaft, asbestos-covered pipes. The print on walls and divan reproduces both pattern and texture of an oriental carpet. Real carpeting covers the Louis XIII chairs and pedestals for ceramic animals. A pair of divans and a profusion of contemporary India prints turn a small study in editor Mary Jane Pool 's New York apartment, opposite page, into an extremely useful and versatile Turquerie. The fabric-covered wall-to-wall desk gives Miss Pool an ample working surface for her favorite craft of decorating small boxes. The divans she uses for packing and gift wrapping, and she often brings dinner guests here for after-dinner coffee. Both the typically Arabesque arrangement of furniture along the walls and the seeming infinity of small pattern make the room seem much larger than it really is. Interior designer, John Rieck.

DRAMATIC GARDEN GRASSES

Lawn grasses and ornamental garden grasses are worlds apart. The ornamentals have a number of virtues that neither their turf counterparts nor ordinary run-of-the-garden flowers possess. They are, for the most part, hardy perennials. They have, as a group, extraordinary effectiveness when massed or when used (especially the more dramatic ones) for accent in gardens. While the individual flowers of most garden grasses are not in themselves spectacular, the flower and seed heads are. Almost all are nearly self-drying before season's end and, if cut and brought indoors, make marvelously varied bouquets—either one or two of a kind, or in combination with other commonly dried field flowers. William H. Frederick Jr., describes the best of the ornamental grasses and tells how to grow them in "Gardener's Month." page 116

MIRRORS ARE MAGIC

Mirrors. We live in a world of them, a reflected world. What tricks they know to play, what a spell they cast—and have cast for how long?

Who first backed glass with quicksilver? From that came the mirror as we now know it. Before that, humanity made do. Ladies peered into small ovals of polished metal. The fair youth Narcissus leaned over a mirroring pool, with fatal effect—he fell in love with his own face, and died of love for it. A Roman emperor, nervous for good reason, caused the principal corridor of his palace to be lined with specially shiny, reflecting marble, that he might see if assassins came creeping up on him. Yes, the mirror-idea was present, right back through time: accordingly, many were the mirror-substitutes, some ingenious (as you may see in museums), some natural (like poor Narcissus' pool). The desire to see oneself, or should need arise, keep watch on what went on behind one's back, was met by a variety of devices.

So far, the mirror was functional; it served purposes—the small metal hand mirror, although often pretty enough, did not claim to be an esthetic object. A wider concept came in with quicksilvered glass. As size enlarged, so did the possibilities—decoration, refraction of light, the charm of illusion. How great could be a great mirror's intrinsic beauty as a thing-in-itself! Artists-craftsmen, incited by that discovery, wrought marvels, insetting the looking glass into gold and silver, intricate inlay or carvings, or precious stones.

Those early masterpiece mirrors must have dominated—for were they not semi-miracles?—the ducal or princely homes they came to adorn. Paintings, doubtless, crowded the walls around them, but the mirrors outdid their rivals in one particular—they were living pictures, their subject, the current moment. "Come, be!" they cried to their owners. "Move, act, love, hate, draw swords, snatch kisses—we will reflect you!" And so they did. Moreover, their limpid surface registered changes, onward from dawn to dusk, and by night redoubled the hundreds of festive candles. They dramatized life; they made theatre of human comings and goings. Mirrors' presences heightened, in men and women, that self-awareness which is civilization. Those lofty and lengthy rooms on which mirrors gazed were already stage-like: grandiose, formal. Mirrors stylized them further. And well that suited the mood of the day's grandees, for whom life was, unceasingly, a performance.

If an ancient mirror could speak of its young days, if its memories could be photographed back to us—what stories! Is it haunted by what it reflected, a vanished world? Met within such a mirror, your face or mine takes on an air of transience, ghostliness almost—what is this face but one of the countless many which glimmered, here, for a moment, then went their ways? Look deeper into this mirror: the Past itself inhabits these watery purplish depths, made more mysterious still by a faint tarnish. Lovely, dimmed, this museum-piece holds secrets inviolate. Should you bring home such a mirror (at what a price!), your home must adjust itself to an alien element. You're exposed to a haughty, fateful, shadowy gaze, until you come to terms with your treasure, and make a friend of it.

"Mirrors themselves are magic"

Mirrors can be uncanny. That they figure so often in fairy and witchcraft stories is not surprising. Old lore attributed to them occult power, or inclined to denounce them as aids to magic. Malevolent queens have made them their confidantes—"Mirror, mirror on the wall, am I not fairest of them all?"—and spell-workers found in them their accomplices. Conjurers use them: "All done by mirrors," explains some sceptic, some knowing one in the audience—but why not, how not?

Mirrors themselves are magic. That superstition surrounds them, one cannot wonder. Dislike, if not actual fear, of breaking a mirror is embedded in most of us, nor can reason dislodge it. Although one may brave out the fear, or laugh it off, it stays potent in others, for which reason, a mishap with a mirror must be concealed, as instinctively, hurriedly, as one conceals the fragments. Otherwise, some good friend comes on to the scene, moaning, "You are going to be unlucky!" Most of us know of people whose dread of a mirror-breakage comes near neurosis. One such replied to a questionnaire as to what is the most bloodcurdling line in English poetry, "Oh, Tennyson's, 'The mirror crack'd from side to side.' " The same person, when watching a Western, closes her eyes when the boys storm in and shoot up the saloon; even on the screen, she cannot abide the sight of a splintered mirror. Most women dare not be ridden by such fears—were ill luck so ready to jump on us, or so easily courted, our lives would be riskier, far, than men's. We resort to purse mirrors, and handle them, ten times daily. And, those slippery mirrors live pouched in glossy-lined purses. So . . .?

BY ELIZABETH BOWEN

Without mirrors we should find our world cut by half

Yet, mirror effects, and mirror associations, for us in our generation are mainly cheerful. Mirrors (with which go expanses of mirrored surfaces) enlarge life. They extend, or seem to extend, space: they increase light. They make less that sense of constriction, of claustrophobia, which could be a creeping threat upon modern living. Were they gone, we should find our world cut by half (what, for instance, more shrinks and darkens a room than the removal of an accustomed mirror?). But mirrors are far from going: they spread, they breed and increase. Never, as ornament, totally out of fashion, they promote themselves from a fashion to a necessity—social, humanistic, and psychological. Huge, bright vertical lakes of mirror now so obliterate walls that the walls seem built of them.

In our cities, mirror is used as lavishly as imperial Rome used gleaming veneers of marble, and with the same intent—to suggest opulence. Also, this heightens pleasure—in restaurants, cafeterias, ballrooms, dance halls—and kindles a sense of glamour and magic luxury. Prototype use of mirrors is the Versailles palace's Gallerie des Glaces, with its blend of lost-looking reflections and gilded cobwebs—unique in history, more unreal than any fairy tale, this hall of illusion enthralls the tourist. Versailles in its heyday was for the elite only: our mirror-world, in continent after continent, is democratic, open to all and any. One makes free of mirrors outdoors as well as in; in shoals, we stream past the mirrors inside the shop fronts. Alongside us speed our images, merged with many. The intellectual, lonely one's lonely question, "What am I—am I? If so, what do I look like?" can be answered at any moment, at any turn. Do mirrors, possibly, mitigate city solitude? Does one not, in the crowded flow across mirrors, have a sense of the human tribe to which one belongs?

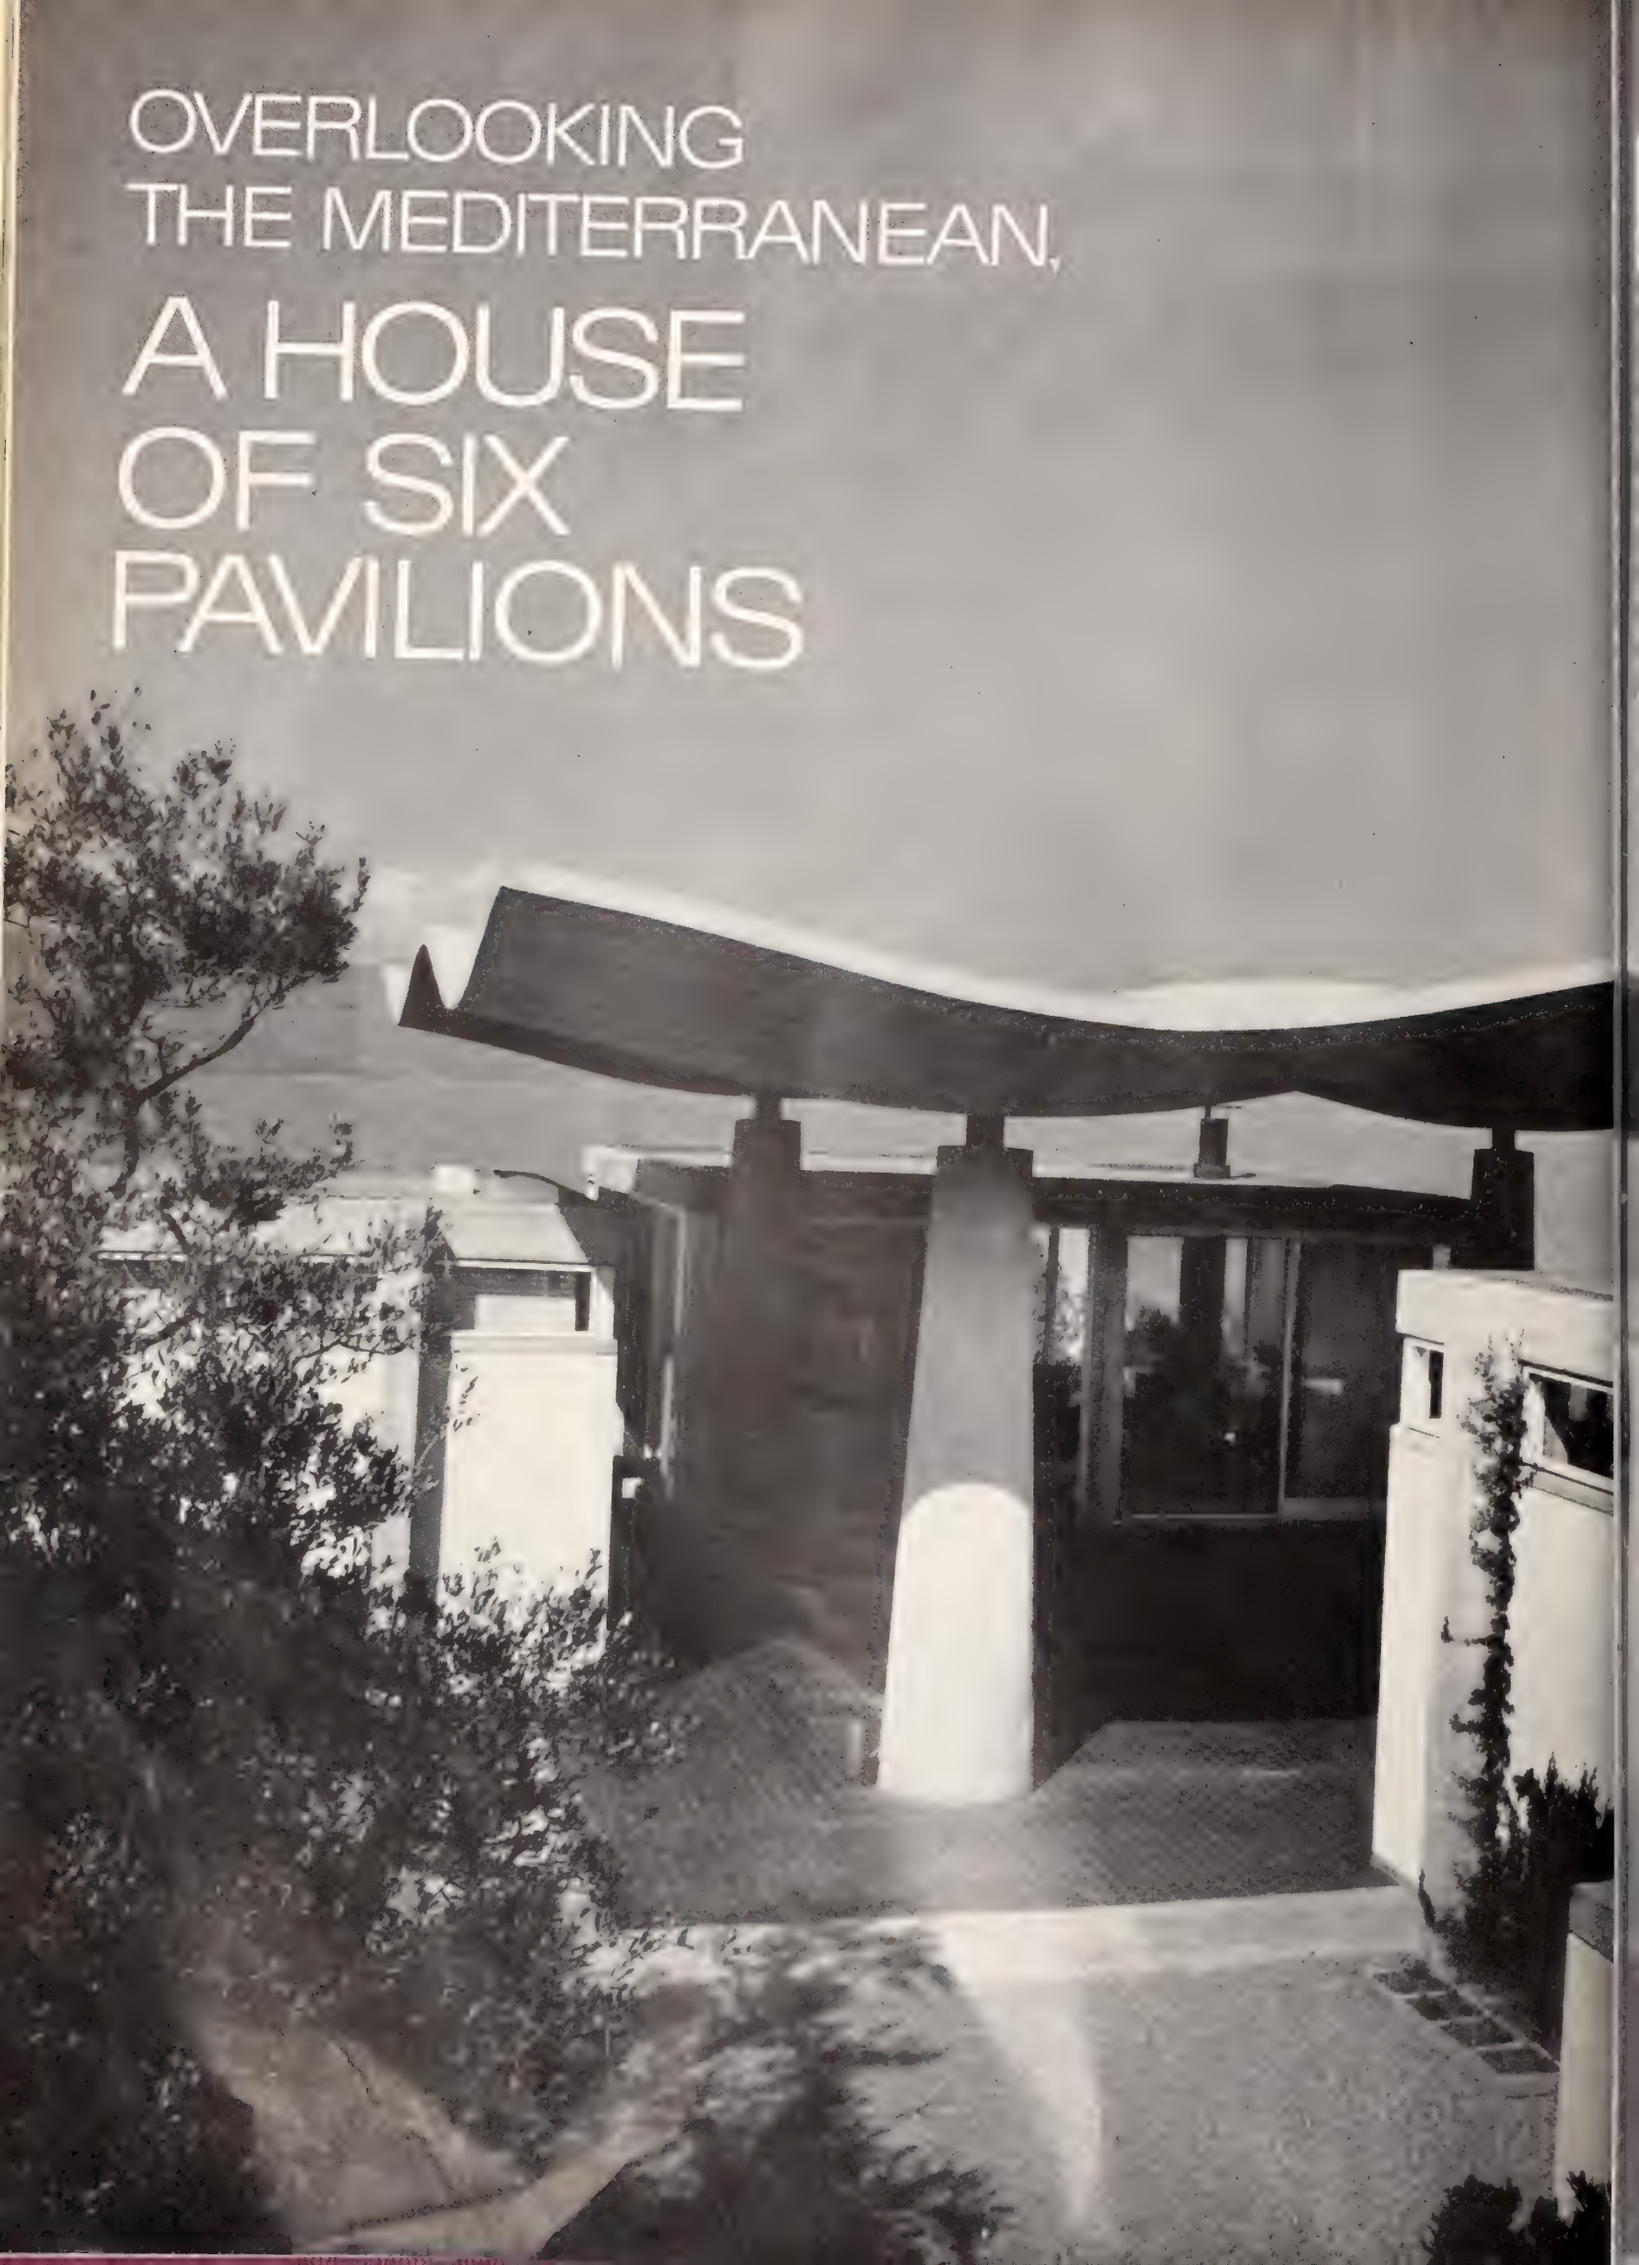
This other dimension, this reflected existence, is a gain, on the whole, but can be confusing. Can one always be certain where "reality" stops and its reflections begin? To enter a much-mirrored room can be disconcerting—most so, when the room at the same time is unfamiliar. To-and-fro bounce the reflections, extended endlessly. How many clocks, one may wonder, lamps, and vases of roses actually are there in here? And still more (and still more important) how many people? Actual persons jumble with what might appear, at the first glance, to be their twins; the same figure perceived at various angles multiplies into two, three, or four. The shy or near-sighted latecomer, on the threshold, has the daunting illusion of entering a large party: those present reduce, when greeted, to half-a-dozen.

Never is one quite alone in a mirrored room—and there can be times when solitude could be restful, still more times when one would not wish to be watched, least of all, by one's ever-critical self. I heard that objection applied to a sumptuous bathroom, by a faltering guest. "But I don't, I'm afraid," she sighed, "come out of my bath looking like Venus rising from the waters. I come out boiled like a lobster, completely crimson. On such occasions, one of me is enough." One may hope that merciful steam blurred the mirrored alcove.

They can make or unmake one's day or evening

Taking leave of the mirror, let us send it back to the role it had at the outset: that of accessory. A servant of vanity? What a bully it can be! What a morale affecter! It can make or unmake, by prognostic, one's day or evening. Ostensibly, one requires it to be "frank." Temperamentally, one prays that it may encourage. "Tell me something," one tells it, "but not too much, please." Clinical exactitude, and precision one does require for the applying of make-up or the shaping of hair, yet the finished work needs a nimbus of slight illusion. Your chosen day-to-day mirror should be at a halfway point between fair and cruel.

There can be unrelentingly adverse mirrors: one of those, I consider, could wreck a hat shop, or, by distortingly broadening the female figure, put an aspiring dress salon out of business. An unfavorable mirror, rightly disliked by you, should by no means (hostess!) find its place in your guest room.



Arguably, much of a mirror's verdict is conditioned by its situation and lighting—a truth which the British, that hardy island race, either scorn or strenuously ignore. A British dressing table, that institution to which the mirror is clamped, is placed in (across or under) a window, thereby compelling its victim's face to confront itself in the full blast of unsparing daylight. Better to know the worst. By night, an overhead light up near the ceiling, sheds down a disparaging, stern, and no-nonsense ray.

Yet no mirror dare one quite bypass, like it or not.

Do we act up to mirrors? Do we try out on them expressions, gestures, not yet released to the world? At the start of the morning or evening mirror session is our attitude pugnacious, or placatory? That assessing stare we level at our reflection may not be exactly inimical, but it is seldom tender. What would it be like, I do wonder, to be a beauty—one who only at long last turns away from her mirror, reluctant, yet with a satisfied sigh?

What I do not believe is that my mirror gives me any idea of me. Looking into a mirror deliberately, I see nothing but a person looking deliberately into a mirror. My few but for that reason notable self-encounters have been unsought, a matter of chance or accident. I'm waylaid by an image, as though by an ambushed bandit, in some unexpected mirror around a corner, in some shop window distant across the street, or coming my way, down some mirror-protracted corridor. Do I know myself when I meet myself? Yes, I find, I do.

OVERLOOKING THE MEDITERRANEAN, A HOUSE OF SIX PAVILIONS

High on the promontory of Cap Bénat near St. Tropez in France sits a house that, seen from the sea, looks like a tiny village clustered under a great undulating sail. Designed by the American architect Philip Johnson for M. and Mme. Eric Boissonnas, it is a summer and weekend house planned for intensive use. The Boissonnas' are a family family who adore their sisters, cousins, aunts, and grandchildren, and although their winters are spent in a portly Paris townhouse, their summers are relaxed, carefree, and peppered with favorite relatives. Hence the complexity of their Riviera house, which consists of six pavilions of which five are enclosed to form the "village." The sixth is open but roofed by the "sail," and the entire complex is arranged around two courtyards (see plan, next page). Two of the pavilions are guest houses, the other four comprise the main house, and during the summer, all six operate at full blast. For winter weekends, when the Boissonnas often come down from Paris, only one guest house (it has a kitchen) is kept open to afford a pleasant two or three days in a snugness assured through orientation. Because the biting Alpine wind called the mistral sweeps down on Cap Bénat like a hawk, the pavilions are strung out in a spearlike formation that points out to sea like a ship's prow, thus presenting to the wind only the narrow edge of the complex, rather than its far more vulnerable length. (Continued)

Canopied pavilion is an outdoor living room open on one side to the sea, but sheltered on three sides by the flanking walls of the living, dining, and master-bedroom pavilions.

Almost Egyptian in style, the tapered columns supporting th canopy roof are of heavily textured concrete. Most of the furniture, inside and outdoors, was brought from Denmark

In the living room is a prefabricated fireplace for chilly nights, and three walls of glass to embrace the view.

The rippled "sail"—the great canopy-like roof that shades the open pavilion—is called in technical parlance a sine wave slab. Constructed of reinforced concrete, it was cast in a mold right on the site. Pavilion is paved with black slate blocks, polished to look like obsidian.

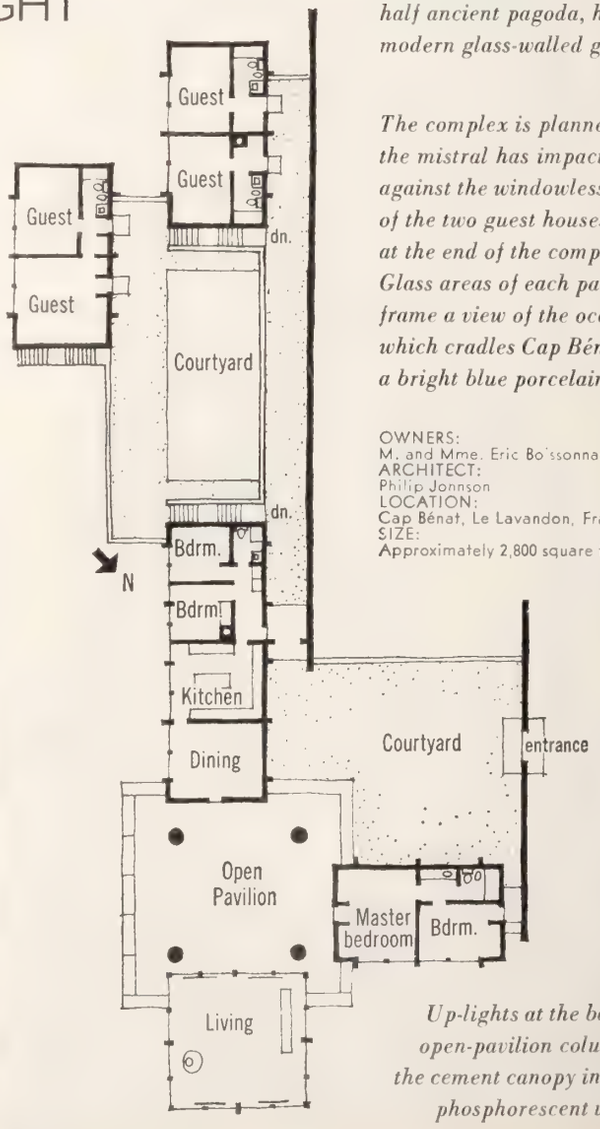
SERENE IN THE SUN, DRAMATIC AT NIGHT

By day, the Boissonnas house lies in the sun like a dozing cat, as comfortable as it is clean. If there is a house motto, it is easy maintenance, and although two servants are kept in residence, they spend most of their time in the kitchen. All the pavilions are built of poured concrete with a stucco facing; all the floors are tiled. There is a paucity of curtains, just enough furniture, a minimum of bibelots, and no lawns to tend, since the two courtyards are surfaced in gravel.



This is an outdoor house, and that is how the Boissonnas live. The living room, which is air-conditioned, they use only in the evenings, and sometimes, since the open pavilion with its night lighting is too dramatic to leave, not even then. Their winter weekends, of course, are more cloistered. All the pavilions are heated by oil-fired radiant heat, a great comfort when the mistral comes soughing down from the Alps and the usually calm Mediterranean, a hillside away, has one of its noisy winter tantrums.

The true front door of the house is a gate in a wall built of local stone and lighted, at night, with funnel fixtures that build conical "trees" of light.

Seen from the sea, the house at night is pure fantasy—half ancient pagoda, half modern glass-walled glitter.

The complex is planned so that the mistral has impact only against the windowless walls of the two guest houses at the end of the compound. Glass areas of each pavilion frame a view of the ocean which cradles Cap Bénat like a bright blue porcelain cup.

One of the liveliest, most sophisticated looks for today's rooms blends the new with the old in an entirely fresh way. It is a sharp-edged look that contrasts this-minute materials like leather, glass, and steel with such perennial textures as linen and caning. It plays vivid colors against bland neutral backgrounds, consistently emphasizes boldness of scale, and, above all, steers clear of clichés. To show what we mean, H&G borrowed designer Peter Prince's old New Jersey house, "Headquarters Farm," once the headquarters of George Washington's army, and furnished it pro tem with "Index," a new collection of furniture by Drexel that combines a diversity of materials—rosewood, leather, steel, glass, pecky pecan—with classic contemporary contours. To form a bridge between old and new, we added old bibelots and modern paintings and we made a point of furniture arrangements and window treatments that would visually expand the small low-ceilinged rooms.

In the living room, for example, we sidestepped the focus-on-the-fireplace cliché and placed the furniture around the perimeter. Instead of hanging a picture over the mantel, we placed paintings where they would complement the furniture arrangement. (Continued)

BRINGS SPARKLE TO TODAY'S ROOMS

Interplay of patter and texture emphasizes sleek lines

And then for the windows we chose a bo contemporary print and hung floor-leng curtains from shallow, thickly padded va ances mounted close to the ceiling.

In choosing fabrics and rugs, we to advantage of certain timeless patterns ar textures that are wonderfully effective establishing a link between past and pre ent. Paisley and damask motifs are cent ries old, but newly interpreted, blown u in scale, and snapped with color, they loo as new as tomorrow. With these, we teame the texture of plain white linen, as familia in the eighteenth century as it is today, an white pleated lamp shades that have th same amenable quality.

In the dining room, we used pattern plu pattern in contrasting scale: on the floo an overscaled black-and-white Paisley on the walls, a tone-on-tone green patter suggesting damask. Together, they make vibrant background for the spare lines o the furniture. For the garden room—an en closed porch added to the old house in re cent years—we chose cotton and liner printed with a vivid overscaled version o an old-fashioned flower favorite, pelargo nium. looks like wallpaper. Gathered softly in each corner, it stands in for curtains when the shades are raised to the ceiling.

Antique furniture and accessories often have a natural sympathy for contemporary designs. They may be as simple and pure of line as the modern furniture itself, or they may add a welcome touch of whimsey. For the "Headquarters Farm" guest room, a light and feminine place, we found a little bamboo-trimmed Victorian desk and chair. On the desk's galleried top we displayed a blue-and-white Canton china plate which, along with blue spongeware on the night table, echoes the bright blue of the white-flowered curtains and the bedspread that matches them.

For the study, we picked two very masculine antique chairs—a Biedermeier wing chair and an eighteenth-century Scotch corner chair—to complement the masculine look of the modern furniture. To accent the rosewood-topped desk, we came upon a Biedermeier mini-chest and a handsome pair of silver-topped inkwells, and to contrast with the steel-framed rosewood end table, an elaborate, brass-bound Chinese tea caddy.

To add a sunny accent to the old gray stones of house exterior, we furnished terrace with contemporary wrought iron, cushioned and awninged in bright yellow.

The sumptuous art of GARNISHING transforms food into fantasy

To garnish is to decorate, adorn, embellish. For a buffet table or special party, a bold and beautiful garnish, like a fabulous accessory on a plain dress, turns simple food into a culinary work of art. Garnishes may be strictly decorative, extraneous, and inedible (like raw turnip flowers), or they may consist of the components of a dish, artfully arranged. Traditionally, all garnishes are made from natural materials such as fruits and vegetables whose color and shape lend themselves to conversion into another form. Garnishing involves some skills, notably techniques of cutting, but mainly it requires an eye for form and design. For techniques, see H&G's Garnishing Cook Book, page 131.

MELON FLOWERS evolve from thin slices of cantaloupe twisted into petals, with melon ball centers. Leaves are cut from the tender green of pineapple fronds. Honeydew slice, cantaloupe half are decorated on sides and top with scoop cutter. Design by Tino Vazquez.

A LITTLE GLOSSARY OF GARNISHES

In the lingua franca of cuisine, a word is often all it takes to indicate the nature and construction of a traditional garnish for a dish. You can be sure that Eggs Florentine will nest on a bed of spinach, that a vegetable served à la Polonaise will have a topping of chopped hard-cooked egg, parsley, and fried bread crumbs. Some names are descriptive—mimosa, for a sprinkling of riced hard-cooked egg yolk; jardinière, for a bouquet of garden vegetables. Others honor famous men and women (Parmentier, Du Barry, Rossini) or a style of regional cooking: Alsacienne implies sauerkraut and sausage; Niçoise, tomatoes and often black olives. Then there are numerous garnishes that, while generally accepted and used, have never been dubbed and can be listed only by their major components. Although a garnish may be associated with one particular dish, it is often teamed with another companion: the Rossini garnish for tournedos, a slice of foie gras and truffle, would be just as good on top of a noisette of lamb or sautéed chicken, although not on a heartier meat such as pork. The following list of garnishes for hors d'oeuvre and sandwich platters, soups, fish and meat entrées defines the character and composition of each garnish and indicates how it might be used.

Garnishes for Hors d'oeuvres and Sandwiches

These are not classic or complex garnishes, merely simple decorative ideas for giving form and color to a platter of appetizers or hors d'oeuvres, or a finishing touch to an assortment of stuffed eggs or open-faced sandwiches.

Celery border Stuff celery stalks with cream cheese or blue cheese, slice into half-inch crescents, and dip one side into chopped nuts. Compose a scalloped or wavy border (one crescent facing down, the next up) around a plate of appetizers.

Cucumber border Peel cucumber, slice a quarter-inch thick, cut slices in half, and dip curved edges in chopped dill or parsley. Arrange in a scalloped circle around any cold hors d'oeuvre.

Dyed egg border Fit shelled hard-cooked eggs into a Mason jar. Fill with a marinade of red wine vinegar, garlic, salt, and pepper. Leave in the refrigerator one week. Where the eggs touch in the jar, there will be a white dot. Halve the polka-dotted eggs and place them, dyed side up, around a tray of hors d'oeuvres.

Mushroom border Flute and pickle mushroom caps. Use to make a ring around, or a stripe across, a tray of hors d'oeuvres.

Olive stripes Stuff black olives with Roquefort cheese, pipe cream-cheese rosettes on each end. Stuff green olives with tuna fish, pipe mayonnaise on each end. Use to define sections of a canapé platter.

Open-faced sandwich garnishes Butter the sides of sandwiches and dip into chopped parsley.

Butter a border on top of a sandwich and sprinkle with chopped ham, chopped nuts, chopped watercress. Press to make border adhere.

Sprinkle fish sandwich with mimosa garnish (see below). Pipe borders or rosettes of anchovy butter, curried cream cheese, garlic, onion, or mustard butter on sandwiches, suiting flavor to topping.

Coat a meat sandwich with aspic. Cool, decorate with truffle or vegetable motif, dipped in aspic. Cool and coat again. Make cucumber cones and pipe horseradish-flavored cream cheese into them. Fix to sandwich surface with a rosette of cream cheese.

Trompe-l'oeil flowers stem from a garnisher's skill

A garden bouquet is the natural ornament for a basket tray bearing bunches of crudités in tiny flowerpots, and when the bold daisies and diffident roses are vegetables in disguise, the effect is twice as engaging. The feigned flowers are stamped with a daisy cutter or carved with a knife from turnip slices, icicle radishes, and carrots, then nestled in celery foliage and firmly pinned to the stalks with toothpicks and wood skewers. HOUSE & GARDEN'S

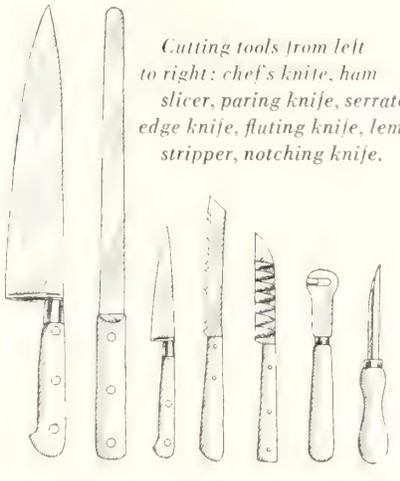
by Dorothy R. Pace

Garnishing is an art inspired by the twin muses of the kitchen—taste and appearance. Basically, it consists of recognizing the decorative qualities inherent in foods, then shaping and arranging them to capitalize on these qualities. Your first consideration should be the purpose of the garnish. Is it to be strictly ornamental, such as a ring of tomato peel and turnip roses around a molded mousse? Or should it also facilitate the serving of a dish, for instance, orange baskets bearing Cumberland sauce for ham, or baked cookie cases filled with ice cream? The majority of garnishes simply consist of the accompaniments to or components of a dish, arranged with an eye to color and design, and with attention to complementary flavors. As Carême, past master of haute cuisine and garnishing, remarked, "It is not enough to make flower-shaped ornaments and pretty little cakes; one must also know that such-and-such an article will go well with such-and-such a thing, and that the whole, grouped with taste, will make a pleasing ensemble."



Once you have determined the purpose of the garnish, you can select the type (containers, slices, molds, etc.) that best suits this purpose. The garnishes that take least time and trouble are those that consist of the different elements of a dish, grouped into "a pleasing ensemble." Garnishes such as carved flowers that require a greater investment of time and skill should be saved for special parties or buffets. In this cook book, you will find the main garnishing techniques and their uses and, on page 130, a glossary of garnishes for hors d'oeuvres and soup, fish, meat, and poultry.

GARNISHING EQUIPMENT

The tools you need for garnishing can be bought from dime and hardware stores, and from shops or department stores that sell cooking equipment and gadgets. Be sure when you buy them that your knives are of excellent quality, with sharp blades and sturdy wood handles. Keep them in good condition and razor-sharp. Carbon steel, which takes a fine edge, is preferable to stainless steel for straight-edged blades. Here are the basics for your batterie de garniture:

Paring knife. This should be really small, with a sharp point. With the blade, you trim and shape vegetables, draw "outlines" to be carved on fruits and vegetables, flute mushroom caps, or style the edge of a fruit or vegetable container. The sharp tip is handy for transferring tiny pieces of garnish onto the surface of an aspic or chaudfroid.

Chef's knife. The cook's faithful standby. The heavy triangular blade takes over the job of chopping parsley, egg white, set aspic, and similar ingredients that might be needed to fill in a platter or make a border for food.

Ham slicer. The long, narrow blade of this knife shaves vegetables and the flesh of melons into thin, translucent slices flexible enough to be folded or twisted into flower shapes.

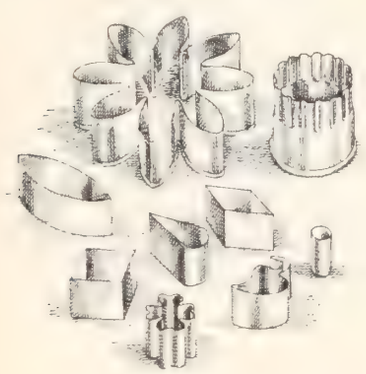
Fluting or decorating knife. A handy little tool for cutting ridged vegetable slices or patterning the smooth edges of a geometric pastry cutout.

Notching knife. A neat gadget that cuts tough-skinned citrus fruits or melons into evenly notched halves for fruit baskets.

Serrated-edge knife. This will cut citrus fruits and tomatoes into really thin slices.

Vegetable peeler. A standard household item, but invaluable for garnishing. Be sure to get the type with a swivel blade. With this, you pare thin strips of cucumber or eggplant peel, or thin layers of beet or carrot to make leaf, stem, and petal garnishes for aspics, chaudfroids, and mousses. The point scrapes delicate designs deep into the hard skins of vegetables and melons.

Lemon stripper. A common bar tool that strips a continuous ribbon from the outside of a cucumber or citrus fruit (orange rind, cut this way, was woven into the basket shown on page 128). It will also etch deep stripes into the skin of a plain vegetable (such as an unpeeled pink potato or eggplant), making it a more decorative accompaniment to a platter of meat or fish.



Slicer. The most versatile type for garnishing is the French mandoline cutter which has a blade that can be adjusted to different thicknesses and a stand to hold it steady. Always use a slicer for any vegetable garnish where uniformity of thickness in the slices is essential.

Fluted oval and plain round scoops are for cutting vegetable or melon balls, scalloping edges.

Ball scoops. These come in various sizes, and plain and round, oval and fluted shapes. Some have two scoops of different diameters, one at each end of the handle. For making balls of melon, potato, turnip, beet, etc., the 1" and 1¼" scoops are best. If the edge of the scoop is sharp enough, you can also use it to scallop the edge or the outside of a vegetable container.

Cutters. Decorative cutters for garnishing come in three sizes and in boxed sets containing a variety of shapes—heart, diamond, spade, club, teardrop, bell, crescent, leaf, star, etc. The smallest, no larger than ½", are called truffle cutters, although their use is not limited to making designs from truffles. Hard-cooked egg white, vegetable peel and slices, candied fruit peel, even pasta dough can be stamped out in these tiny shapes to decorate aspics, chaudfroids, mousses, desserts, soups. Aspic cutters measure about 1" and also shape croutons, pastry, vegetable slices, or miniature cookies for cake decoration. Cookie cutters, the largest of all, are equally good for cutting out pastry or toast garnishes. In addition to these shapely, decorative cutters there are sets of plain or fluted pastry cutters in assorted shapes and individual cutters in simple flower designs. By combining different cutouts, you can create an endless variety of decorative patterns.

Cutters of all sizes and designs stamp out flowers, leaves, geometric shapes as decoration for aspics, mousses, chaudfroids, pastry.

Graters. The grater with round holes is the best type for general garnishing purposes. Some unlikely materials become beautiful garnishes when grated. Grated radishes make the most delicate of borders on an open-faced sandwich, grated hard-cooked egg white is a pretty border or surface decoration for a fish, and grated hard-cooked egg yolk turns into the famous mimosa garnish for salads or vegetables. (You can also rub the egg yolk through a coarse sieve directly onto the food.) The Japanese metal or ceramic graters with tiny sharp teeth are handy for grating orange or lemon rind really fine.

Picks and skewers. Wood or bamboo skewers provide the hidden support for stems of carved vegetable "flowers" and for bread carvings. Wood toothpicks serve the same kind of purpose and help to hold sections of a garnish together. Protruding ends of skewers and picks can be nipped off cleanly with nail clippers.

Pastry bags and tubes. One of the most protean of all garnishing tools is the pastry bag and its battery of tubes. With it you can easily pipe whipped cream or icing on a dessert or cake, mayonnaise on a fish or mousse, a border of duchesse potatoes around a sole bonne femme or coquilles St. Jacques, a vegetable purée into an artichoke bottom or pastry case. You should have two or three pastry bags (the kind coated on the inside with plastic are easier to wash) and at least four tubes: a large and a small rose tube and a large and a medium plain tube. The rose tubes enable you to pipe almost any kind of rosette or swirl. The large plain tube forms potato, dumpling, or gnocchi mixtures into attractive cork shapes, and the smaller one can be used to write on desserts with icing or whipped cream.

Molds and tins. These are the shape-makers of garnishing. Small molds turn otherwise formless foods (rice, forcemeat, vegetable purée) into symmetrical garnishes. Large molds, while decorative in themselves, often need further garnishing to relieve their heavy, dominant forms. From the vast assortment of plain and decorative molds, make a selection that will be most versatile and suited to your needs. A basic collection might start with charlotte and ring molds for aspics, mousses, desserts, rice, vegetable salads; small cylindrical dariole molds and oval oeuf en gelée molds for individual servings of rice pilaf, potatoes Anna, pâté en gelée and other aspics; one or two large shapely molds, such as a melon mold and a Turk's-head mold. Muffin tins, Chinese teacups, custard cups, ramekins, and small glasses are also good for forming small portions of food. For baking pastry shells, you will need tartlet tins, round and oval, with plain and fluted edges. The shells can hold small servings of creamed or puréed vegetables, berries, custard, or sauce.

CONTAINERS, CUPS, AND CASES

The most decorative and versatile of all garnishes are the artfully carved or shaped shells made from vegetables, fruits, bread, and pastry and cookie dough, for they can be filled with any mixture that is appropriate to the dish being served. Nature has created a number of good ready-made containers. Among them are mushrooms, artichokes, cabbages, cucumbers, bell peppers, tomatoes, turnips, squash, oranges, lemons, apples, and melons. Small, firm vegetables can be scooped out, filled, and used as a platter garnish to hold individual servings of other vegetables, sauces, rice, purées, even minuscule soufflés. The larger ones form containers in their own right and act as bowls or servers. Fruit shells are mainly reserved for the dessert course, holding ices, berries, and sherbets, but they can also appear on a meat or poultry platter, bearing fruit sauces or other sweet accompaniments.

Red or green bell peppers are among the simplest vegetable containers, since nature has already hollowed out the center. Select a well-formed pepper that will stand upright. If it lists slightly, trim rounded portions of bottom to uniform height. To provide the maximum cup height, slice off the stem end at the point where the pepper curves inward. Remove seeds and white ribs from inside. For a peaked or scalloped edge, trace design on the outside of the pepper with a pencil and cut it out with a paring knife. You can also make diamond- or crescent-shaped cutouts in the sides with aspic cutters by laying the pepper flat on its side and pressing the cutter through the shell from the inside. This type of decorated pepper, filled with vegetable sticks, pickles, and cherry tomatoes makes a good center garnish for a platter of sandwiches, cheeses, or hors d'oeuvres. Raw peppers with shaped edges might hold salads mixed with mayonnaise, cooked peppers, rice pilaf or carrot balls.

Cucumbers, shaped into cups or boats, are excellent containers for spiced creams or vegetable salads to garnish cold meats or fish.

For a cup, cut the cucumber in half crosswise, slice off and discard the pointed ends, leaving a fairly deep section. Scratch or etch a design into the skin with the point of a vegetable peeler or a lemon stripper—straight lines, a spiral, or whatever your fancy dictates. You can also ridge the skin by pulling the tines of a fork down it. Cut deeply enough so the pale flesh of the cucumber shows up against the green skin. Then scoop out the center with a small spoon to form a deep cup.

For miniature cups, cut the cucumber crosswise in sections about 1" deep and hollow them out slightly with a ball scoop. These are good cases for hors d'oeuvre fillings—spiced cottage cheese, blue cheese softened with sour cream, caviar, piped-in salmon mousse.

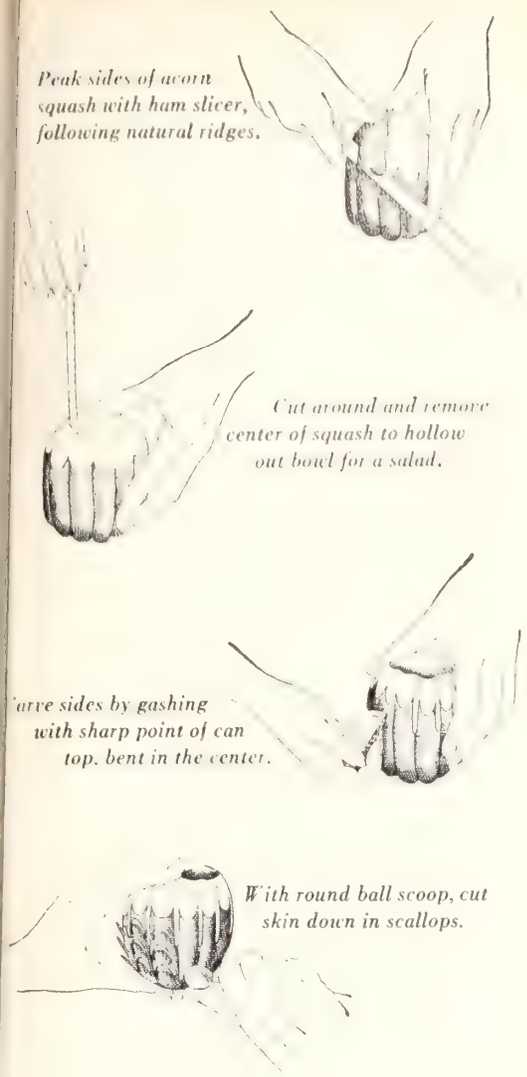
For cucumber boats, cut the cucumber lengthwise, scallop or notch the edge, and hollow out just enough pulp to accommodate the chosen filling—shrimp salad, sauce, caviar, or any cold garnish that is appropriate to the food being served.

Celery root can be turned into a delicate translucent cup. Peel the root and trim to a cup shape with a vegetable peeler. Cut a spiral groove around the outside with a lemon stripper or the point of the peeler. Scoop out the center with a knife, or use the vegetable peeler as a corer. Boil until tender, but still firm. Cool and fill with a creamy dressing to complement a salad. Or fill, while warm, with Hollandaise or Béarnaise sauce to accompany fish or meat.

Tomatoes make colorful, versatile cases for all kinds of mixtures, from creamed spinach to cheese soufflé. Choose firm tomatoes. If they are to be served cold, peel them. Leave the skin on if they are to be cooked and served hot. Cut a ½" slice from the tops and scoop out seeds and pulp with a spoon, leaving a firm outer shell. Turn upside down to drain before filling or cooking.

Cherry tomatoes may also be peeled, scooped out (with a demi-tasse spoon), marinated in oil-and-vinegar dressing, and then stuffed. Fill them with diced seviche as an appetizer, with caviar to border a fish masked with a bland sauce, with pâté to top a sautéed slice of beef filet, or with curried rice to ring a platter of grilled chicken.

Mushroom caps and artichoke bottoms, natural saucer shapes, are traditionally filled with other vegetables—petits pois, glazed carrot balls, piped purées—with forcemeat, foie gras, minced or creamed mixtures. They can also offer small helpings of sauces.



Squash, with their varied colors and interesting shapes, make extremely decorative containers.

Tiny zucchini, halved and scooped out, can be stuffed and baked with savory mixtures such as minced mushrooms, bread stuffing seasoned with anchovy paste, sautéed onion and prosciutto mixed with rice.

Baby eggplant boats can bear a cargo of ground lamb, rice pilaf with currants and pine nuts, sautéed zucchini combined with onion and tomato.

Uncooked acorn squash is easily turned into a handsome individual salad bowl. With a knife, scallop or peak the edge, and fringe the sides by making downward cuts in the skin with a ball scoop. Hollow out and fill with seafood or chicken salad, topped with avocado balls (dip them in cold water to prevent discoloring) or cherry tomatoes. Use firm red apples for fruit salad.

MAKING A SQUASH CONTAINER

Cut around and remove center of squash to hollow out bowl for a salad.

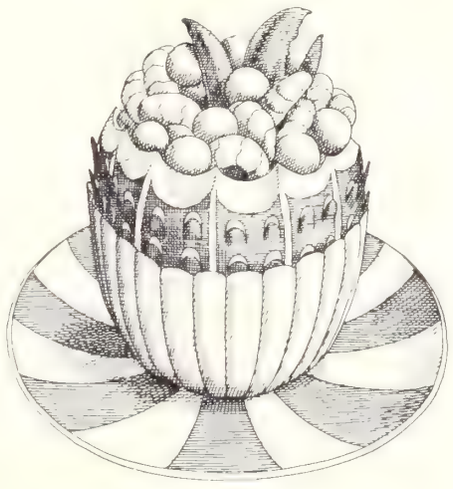
With round ball scoop, cut skin down in scallops.

Oranges and lemons make colorful, sturdy cups and baskets. For a cup, cut a slice from the stem end of the orange, about ⅕ of its depth. Remove most of the pulp with a knife or a grapefruit spoon and then, starting at the cut edge, pull away the rest of the pulp and the inner skin from the pith, leaving a smooth, dry shell. If you want to cut designs into the shell, press an aspic or truffle cutter into it from the inside.

For lemon cups, first cut a slice from the bottom of the lemon so that it will stand upright and hollow out in the manner already described. Orange shells can be filled with hot or cold fruit salads; marinated avocado and onion; condiments to ring a dish of curry; lingonberry or currant preserve to garnish game; applesauce and cranberry relish to accompany pork and turkey. Lemon shells make attractive containers for creamed shrimp, Hollandaise sauce, or mayonnaise. As a garnish for poached salmon, dip the cut edge into chopped parsley or dill and pipe the mayonnaise inside, mounding it higher than the green rim. Make full or half-size cups, according to how much you want to serve.

Lidded lemon cups, filled with sherbet and set on a bed of lemon leaves, are a pretty accompaniment for a plain pound cake. Trim the bottom of the lemon and cut a ¾″ slice from the pointed end to make a cap. Remove pulp from cup and cap, fill cup with sherbet, replace cap and put in freezer until ready to serve.

For orange and lemon baskets, shape a handle on top by cutting out the center section leaving a strip of peel extending halfway down the fruit. Remove all pulp.



Empty baskets or shells will keep in the refrigerator in a tightly closed plastic bag for two to three days.

Bread containers, carved from an unsliced loaf of firm white bread and fried or oven toasted, may be substituted for pastry shells in all non-dessert recipes. To make barquettes, little boat-shaped containers to be filled with vegetables, purées, pâté, creamed meats, and shellfish, trim a whole loaf of its crust and cut it into slices 1″ thick, then cut each slice on the diagonal. Using a paring knife, saw a boat shape of maximum width from each triangle. Cut into bread in center ½″ ¾″ deep, leaving a ¼″ edge all around. With your fingers, gently pick out the center bread leaving a bottom about ¼″ thick. Brush all over with melted butter and bake on a cookie sheet in a 350° oven until golden, about 15 minutes, or fry in deep fat and drain. To store, put the barquettes in a closed container or plastic bag after they have completely cooled. Fill them with creamed spinach to surround sautéed veal cutlets, or sautéed chopped mushrooms masked with a piquant velouté sauce to garnish a fish dish. Mound them with pâté, cover with a sauce Périgourdine, and serve on grilled tournedos. Or pile them high with stewed hot cranberries and apple and arrange around pork chops or roast.

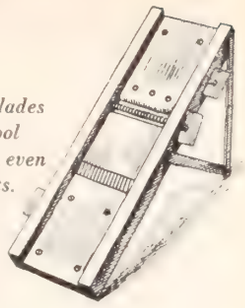
For larger containers, hollow out a whole oblong or round loaf, leaving a shell ½″ thick. A large container may act as an outsize vol-au-vent shell, or serve as a display piece to hold an arrangement of vegetable flowers. (Before placing in the oven, reinforce the sides of the container to prevent their caving in by forcing toothpicks or skewers down into the bread walls.) If you are carving a basket to hold an arrangement of vegetable flowers, make the bottom 2″ thick and don't angle the sides too much; a heavy, wide base is needed to support the weight of the flowers.

The edges of large toasted bread containers may be patterned with cutouts, but be sure to cut near the top to prevent runny fillings, such as lobster Newburg, leaking out of the holes. Stamp out the designs with aspic cutters, turning the unbaked shell on its side and pressing the cutter from the inside out. Reinforce the spaces between designs with toothpicks.

Small pastry cases baked in 2½″ and 3″ tartlet tins can hold all manner of main-course and dessert garnishes from sauced asparagus tips to strawberries and whipped cream. To bake, place a round of dough in the tartlet tin, pressing well into the angle between bottom and sides and into the sides, if fluted. Trim off excess dough by turning tin upside down and pressing edge against board, or running a rolling pin lightly across the top. Cut a round of waxed paper 1″ larger than the bottom of the tin and press it onto the dough, covering the bottom completely. Put uncooked beans or rice on the paper to hold it down during baking and keep the pastry flat. Bake in a 350° oven for 20 minutes, remove paper and beans or rice, and bake 5 minutes longer. Unfilled shells may be frozen or stored in an airtight tin until needed. When ready to use, fill and reheat in a 350° oven for 15 minutes if baking is to be served warm. Garnish meat and poultry dishes with shells filled with creamed spinach, bordered or striped with crumbled crisp bacon, or creamed leeks or onions, sprinkled with grated cheese and glazed. Creamed or curried shellfish is an excellent garnish for a plain poached fish. Try sautéed chicken livers and mushrooms bound with a Madeira-flavored Béchamel sauce around a platter of scrambled eggs, or individual quiche Lorraine for a luncheon dish of steamed asparagus, ham slices, or spinach pudding.

Metamorphosis of acorn squash into sculptured individual bowl of seafood salad, garnished with avocado balls, lobster claws. Idea by Tino Vazquez.

You can turn the shells into little "skillets" by adding a pastry handle to a 3″ round tartlet shell. Bake strips of dough 1″ long and ¼″ wide, with a hole cut into the end of each. When ready to serve, fill shell with creamed fish, vegetable, or meat, and stick the handle into the filling near the side.



Small vol-au-vent shells of any shape are good containers for creamed meat, fish, or chicken. Press out shapes from ½″-thick puff paste with cookie cutters, two pieces for each shell. Arrange half the shells on a cookie sheet lined with heavy brown paper. Cut out the centers of the rest leaving a ½″ border. Moisten those borders with milk and place, wet side down, on the cutouts on the cookie sheet. Press to join. Bake. The remaining centers and scraps of dough can be cut into motifs with aspic cutters, frozen, baked or unbaked, and used at a later date to garnish a fish or roast meat.

Tiny profiteroles are versatile garnishes. Use a meat, fish, or vegetable filling, and float them in soup. Stuff them with a shellfish, vegetable or chicken salad, and arrange in a border around a cold mousse. Pack them with a vegetable purée, quickly reheat in the oven at the last minute, and pop them around a meat entrée. Pipe whipped cream, custard, or ice cream into them to accompany a fruit dessert.

Brown-edge cookie batter can be turned into graceful pastry cases. Make cookies 5″ in diameter and bake only four at a time. When done, quickly place them on upturned glasses. They will drape down over the glass and cool into cases that can be laden with ice cream, fruit salad, mousse, etc. For small cases to garnish the edge of a dessert mold, make the cookies 2″ in diameter and drape over shot glasses. Pipe in whipped cream.

Baked brioches are easily converted into containers by lifting out the ball on the top and picking out the inside to make a hollow. Fill the brioche with pâté or other meat purée and heat before serving.

Potato croustades act as crusty, tasty containers for cooked vegetables. Line well-buttered muffin tins with a ½″-thick layer of duchesse potato mixture: add 2 whole eggs, 2 ounces melted butter, salt, pepper, and nutmeg to taste to 1 pound boiled, dried, mashed potatoes, and beat in mixer or by hand until smooth enough to spread easily. Brush inside with beaten egg and bake until golden. Unmold onto a buttered cookie sheet, brush outside with egg, and return to the oven to brown on the outside. Or, line buttered tins with shredded raw potatoes and bake until brown and crisp. There is also a gadget called a bird's-nest fryer specially designed for fried potato croustades, or potato nests. Line the larger basket with shredded potatoes and fit the smaller basket into it, pressing well so as to compress the potato wall. Trim off any surplus shreds of potato and fry in deep fat until crisp.

Mandoline cutter with blades that adjust is essential tool for making thick or thin, even slices of vegetables, fruits.

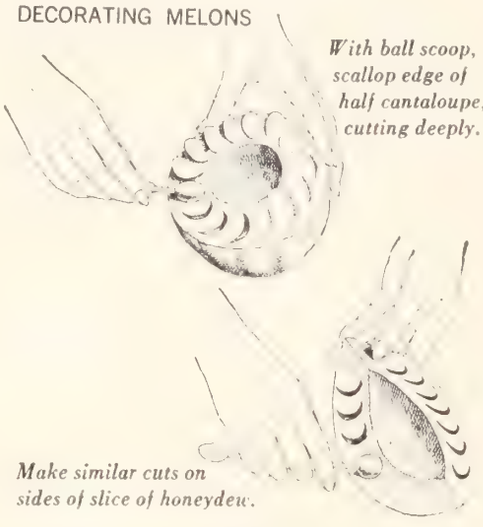
SLICES

Thin, flexible slices of vegetables, fruit, and meat can be twisted into decorative shapes or arranged in overlapping patterns as garnishes for food and platters.

Slice a lemon or cucumber as thinly as possible, first scoring the skin very deeply lengthwise with a lemon stripper. Garnish the base of a meat, fish, or vegetable salad with the notched slices. Or, slice a peeled lemon and arrange the slices in a fish-scale pattern as a bed for a poached fish.

Slice a radish, lemon, cucumber, or tomato as thinly as possible. Slit each slice just to the center. Twist one side of the slit toward you and the other away from you and arrange slices upright in a row on a mold or salad topped with mayonnaise. Individual twists are used on the top of open-faced sandwiches. Cucumber slices may also be twisted into cones and filled with purées, creams, or savory butters. Or, halve a slice and slit one piece halfway down the center, cutting from the straight edge, and the other from the round edge. Slip the two slits into each other and stand the four-petaled slice upright on a melba round. Rosettes of pâté, mayonnaise, flavored butter, or cream cheese can be piped in between the four petals. Slices of radish, beet, and small salami may be treated in the same way.

Thin slices of meat, twisted into cone-shaped containers, can garnish the surface of meats, molds, or salads. Fill, if desired, with softened pâté, horseradish cream, or any appropriate mixture, or simply add a sprig of watercress for color. Attach them with a little butter, mayonnaise, or cream cheese, tips to the center, tops of cones radiating out.



To make ham cones, cut large thin ham slices into 2″ squares. Cut a ½″ triangle from one corner of a stack of slices. Hold each slice firmly, cut-corner up, and overlap the two sides so that the center of the cut edge forms the point of the cone. Secure with a toothpick about halfway up the overlap. For a double cone, take an oblong of ham about 2″ by 3½″. Bend down the two upper corners, overlapping them about ½″. Hold overlap to other side of slice with index finger, forming two cones. Bring them together. Secure with a toothpick. Pipe two complementary fillings into each cone. Tiny cornucopias of bologna or salami can be made by cutting a stack of slices in half and overlapping the sides, making the center of the cut edge the point of the cone.

Oblong slices of ham or bologna can also be spread with a creamy filling and rolled up cigar fashion. Moisten ends with mayonnaise and dip into chopped black or green olives, chopped nuts, or hard-cooked egg white, or grated, hard-cooked egg yolk. Garnish a cold rice ring or vegetable salad with them. Or, roll a spread slice around a pickle, chill, then slice into pinwheels as a garnish for a platter of sandwiches or hors d'oeuvres.

Slices of sautéed apple are a delicious cooked garnish for roast pork or chops. Peel or leave unpeeled, as you wish. Cut into ½″ slices and remove the core section with a star-shaped aspic cutter. Sauté briefly in butter and arrange around a roast as a border or as an individual garnish on slices of roast pork or pork chops. A small bunch of 2½″ to 3″ batons of braised celery may be slipped through the center hole of each slice.

Slices of cantaloupe can be folded into petal shapes as a pretty variation on the usual melon balls. Halve melon crosswise, remove seeds and a wide strip of tough rind, and, using a ham slicer, cut thin, almost transparent slices of flesh straight across (the melon should not be too ripe). Hold slice flat on the palm of your hand, and curl one side in toward the other (see sketch). Curl outer edge in again, to make a flower. You may, if you like, slip a melon ball in the center.

DECORATING MELONS

With ball scoop, scallop edge of half cantaloupe, cutting deeply.

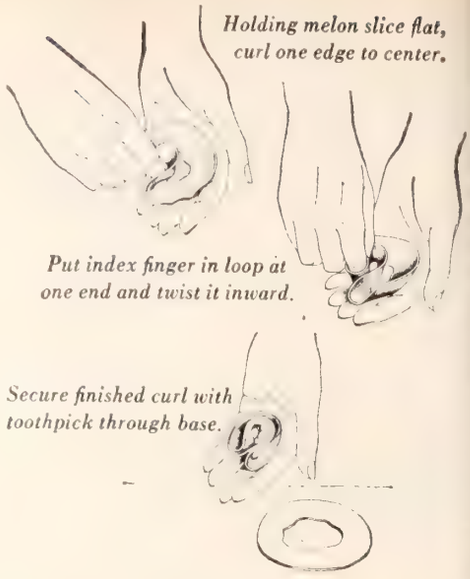
BALLS, WEDGES, AND TURNED VEGETABLES

Some of the simplest and most effective garnishes are those made from balls or wedges of vegetables or fruit, or from whole fluted or turned vegetables.

Lemon wedges become more decorative if one cut surface is dipped into chopped parsley or dill. Stand the wedges on their rind, dipped surfaces in the same direction, around a poached or baked fish, an antipasto tray, or a bland meat salad.



Tomato wedges, hot or cold, can be alternated with cooked turnip wedges pinwheel fashion around boiled meat. Or quarter cooked pink potatoes and peel half of them. Alternate the pink and the plain.

Balls or ovals of beet, potato, turnip, shaped with a round or oval scoop, may be boiled and arranged in mounds between bunches of braised celery or endive, whole string beans, or asparagus tips, in a pleasing combination of round and long shapes.

Mushroom caps for garnishing are often turned or fluted to give the top a swirled design. The classic method, difficult to master, calls for fluting the unpeeled mushroom with a small sharp paring knife, starting at the center of the cap and cutting to the outer edge in deep arched grooves spaced ⅛″ to ¼″ apart. The cutting edge of the knife should be at a slight angle to the cap, facing away from you. An easier way is to use a lemon stripper.

Whole cooked beets may be turned by etching a continuous spiral around the outside with a lemon stripper or the point of a vegetable peeler.

MAKING MELON CURLS

Holding melon slice flat, curl one edge to center.

Put index finger in loop at one end and twist it inward.

Secure finished curl with toothpick through base.

PIPED GARNISHES

Just about any dish can be enhanced by a purée, pâté, cream, or other soft mixture piped in a pleasing design of swirls, rosettes, wavy or straight lines.

Any mixture to be piped should be free of lumps and sufficiently thick to hold its decorative shape (beat vegetable purées in a mixer or blender to get a really smooth consistency).

Hold the pastry bag tapered end down and fold the top over your hand like a deep cuff. Drop the pastry tube into the narrow opening at the end. Fill the bag with the piping mixture, twist it closed above the filling and straighten out the cuff. Squeeze firmly with one hand while guiding the bag with the other.

To make rosettes, use a rose tube (the one with a serrated edge), hold the bag at right angles to the surface, with the point of the tube nearly touching, and squeeze the bag firmly and briefly, lifting the point of the tube straight up as the rosette is formed. Repeat to form rows or clusters. To make ridged swirls, use the same tube, but hold the bag at an angle and gently squeeze while describing a continuous swirl. When making lacy designs or writing with the small plain tube, hold the bag at an angle, close to the surface.

For a cream soup, pipe a rosette of savory whipped cream in the center of each serving. To garnish a roast of lamb, pipe puréed peas into mushroom caps and arrange around the meat. If you are decorating an aspic mold, pipe ridged swirls of softened pâté onto the first solidified layer, so that it shows through when the aspic is unmolded. Pipe duchesse potatoes around a steak on a plank, brush with beaten egg and let the top glaze slightly. Or, define sections on a large platter with pipings of potato, fill one section with meat, the others with glazed vegetables (carrots, onions, and mushrooms for veal; artichoke hearts, onions and mushrooms for beef; turnip balls, onions, and sautéed apple cubes for pork; beets, cauliflower, and onion for fowl).

For desserts, rosettes of whipped cream can be piped on Bavarian creams, cold soufflés, or cakes. Or, make tiny decorations for cakes, ice cream, fruits, and puddings by piping choux pastry designs onto a lightly greased and floured cookie sheet with a plain tube and baking them in a slow oven (under 300°) for a few minutes, or until brown. They hold up well and may be stored in an airtight tin.

FLOWERS MADE FROM VEGETABLES

Although real flowers are occasionally to be seen garnishing desserts and even entrées, traditionally the flowers that bloom around foods are artfully cut, carved, or stamped from vegetables. Small white turnips, carrots, red and yellow onions, scallions, red and white radishes, parsnips, and the giant Japanese radish called daikon are all good raw materials for flowers. Parsley, dill, watercress, celery and carrot tops, and florist's kale fill in for foliage. If leaves are required, they can be cut from cabbage leaves, cucumber rind or a firm-skinned green vegetable, such as a pepper. These flowers are regarded as inedible garnishes. Their primary function is decoration and, like real flowers, they can form the centerpiece or the border for a platter of food. (For examples of such flower garnishes and some of their manifold uses, see page 128.) Always keep cut vegetable flowers in cold water until ready to use to preserve their freshness and shape, then drain well on paper toweling. Vegetables for carving should be slightly limp and pliable to the knife, so buy them a day ahead and leave them at room temperature overnight. After carving flowers with petals that should open out, again leave them at room temperature until the petals relax and droop a little. They will open out more when put in the cold water.

Chrysanthemums. A large symmetrical round onion with a pointed top is the basis for this flower—a red onion for a pink-tinged chrysanthemum, a yellow onion, dyed to a stronger tone with yellow food coloring, for a golden one. Peel the onion. Hold root end down and cut into quarters and then into eighths, cutting downward through about ⅞ of the onion's depth, but leaving the sections attached at the base. Then slice each section into narrow petals, making sure you cut right through the center each time. Immerse in cold water (tinted with food coloring, if desired) until the petals spread. Drain on paper toweling and, if necessary, spread the petals even further by pulling them outward gently.

Pinks. Cut off about 1" of the white part of a scallion above the root end. Trim off dangling roots, but leave bulb. With a small sharp knife, make downward slashes from cut end to about ⅜" above the bulb, forming petals. Put in water to spread petals, adding red food coloring for pink flowers. Drain and mount on toothpicks or skewers if they are to form part of a bouquet.

Carrot flowers, tomato wedges, green leaves cut into a spiky fan garnish a platter of céleri rémoulade. Design by Charles M. Miyashiro.

Daisies and black-eyed Susans. Stamp out the shapes from a ⅛"-thick slice of white turnip with a 2" or 3" daisy cutter. Dye some yellow, leave others white. For centers, cut tiny rounds of lemon peel for daisies, slice off the tip of a black olive for black-eyed Susans. For a more colorful center, cut small rounds of carrot, fringe the edges with scissors or a tiny fluted circular cutter and place under the lemon or olive round. Spear to center of daisy with toothpick, snipping off excess wood with nail clippers. These flat flowers can be arranged around a platter in a border, or speared to celery stalks as part of a charmingly naïve flowerpot bouquet like the one shown on the cook book cover.

Carrot flowers. Wafer-thin slices of carrot (cut, for uniformity, on a mandoline) can be put together in graceful flower forms.

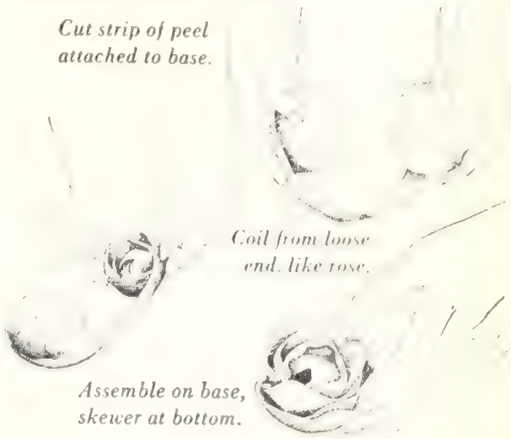
For a lily shape, cut elongated, diagonal slices. Curl one slice around a thin stamen of carrot, like a cone, wrap another slice around its base, curling the top edge over like a petal, add another curled petal on the opposite side and spear together through base with a toothpick.

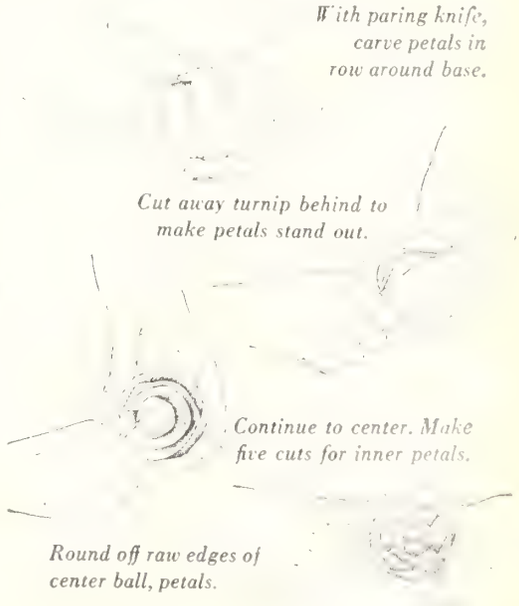
MAKING CARROT LILY

For a flower with fringed petals, peel a large carrot, place the long flexible blade of a ham slicer flat against it and with a rapid, up-and-down sawing motion, slice off a thin continuous spiral with a ragged edge like the shavings made by a pencil sharpener (see sketch). Curl the peeled strip into a wide cone and secure at base with a toothpick. Or, make a double cone by rolling from each end and skewering the two together at the center.



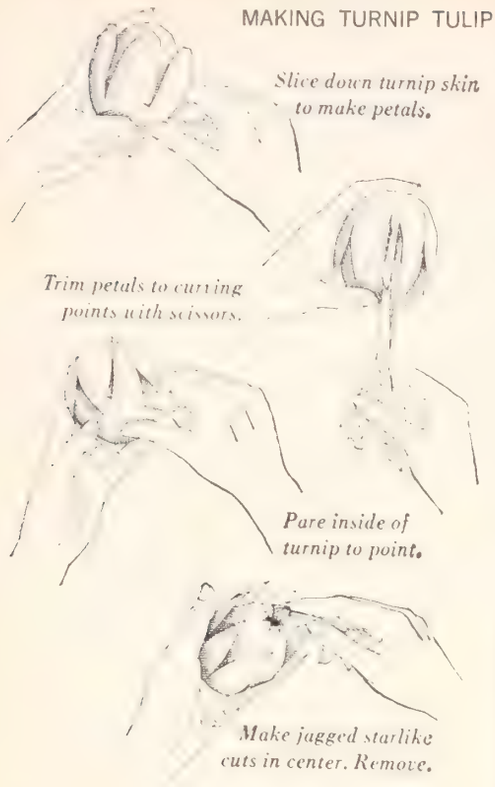
MAKING FRINGED CARROT FLOWER

Radish flowers. The long white icicle radishes make the most attractive flowers. Slice downward from below the level of the pointed root, starting with a shallow cut and going deeper toward the base, to make long slender petals. These will open out when soaked in cold water. Shape tip a little. Red radishes can be cut the same way, but their round form is not nearly as pleasing.



Tomato roses. For this you need large, round, firm, red-skinned tomatoes. Start by cutting a slice around the top or stem end, separating it from the tomato pulp, but leaving it attached to the skin at one end. Cut skin from tomato in a continuous 1"-wide band, being careful it does not break (see sketch). Starting at free end of skin, roll it around, shaping into a rose, and assemble on the base slice.

MAKING TOMATO ROSE



Turnip flowers. While these are without doubt the loveliest of the vegetable flowers, they are also the most difficult to make, requiring patience, a steady hand, and some skill. Once you have mastered the carving technique, you can devise other shapes, but it is best to start with the basic rose. Choose turnips that are firm and hard, not spongy in the center, and try to pick a shape that conforms to the shape of the flower you are going to make—round for a rose, slightly elongated for the trumpet of a daffodil. For the rose, cut the base from a small white turnip. Peel and shape the top into a smooth round ball. Now carve a series of petal shapes around the base with the point of a small sharp paring knife, cutting out the turnip behind each petal to make it stand out in relief. Carve a second row behind the first, alternating the petals (see sketch). Make two more rows, decreasing in size as you near the center, and whittle the top of the ball to resemble the heart of the rose. Even any ragged edges and hold in a bowl of cold water, plain or tinted with red or yellow food coloring, until ready to dry and use. A border of alternating white turnip roses and red tomato roses makes a brilliantly contrasting garnish for a pale mousse. Tiny carrot roses can also be carved in the same manner.

CUT-OUT GARNISHES FOR ASPICS AND CHAUDFROIDS

In this category, cutters play an important part. Designs stamped from truffle, eggplant skin, olives, carrots, beets, hard-cooked egg white, and other edible materials turn a plain aspic or chaudfroid into a work of art.

To create a design in an aspic-lined mol on the surface of a chaudfroid, dip each ele of the design into liquid aspic, carefully posi it, and chill until set. Cover set design with a layer of cool liquid aspic to seal it in place.

To make a daisy design in a 9"-12" roun ring mold, you will need one hard-cooked egg a few sprigs of tarragon. Slice the egg white thicker than 1/16" and press out as many pe as possible with a tiny, tear-shaped truffle cu Put them in a glass or shallow bowl contair a little liquid aspic. For a round mold, you mi have a bunch of daisies in the center, for a r mold, a single daisy on each side, stalks fac in opposite directions. The top of the mold sho be lined with a 1/2"-thick layer of set aspic. a drop of liquid aspic where you want the cer of a daisy to be and place a small, firm round hard-cooked egg yolk on it. Remove petals fr aspic (the point of a small paring knife is go for this) and arrange around yellow center, e almost touching it. When flowers are done, st leaves from a stem of tarragon (if unavailal use watercress or parsley) and plunge for a f seconds into a little boiling aspic. Place stem position and then dip tarragon leaves in asp and arrange a few at either side of it. Don't u too many leaves, the effect should be simple a natural.

For a lily-of-the-valley design, cut out ti bell-shaped or round sections of egg white. U a tarragon stem for the stalk and blanched Ch nese pea pods, split open, for the leaves. Th time, place the stalk first. Dip tarragon stem in boiling aspic and position, curling the top ov like a lily-of-the-valley stalk. When stalk is s make a row of aspic-dipped bells or rounds clo to the underside of the curve for a few inch down the stem. Trim ends of pea pods to a grac ful leaf shape, dip in aspic, and arrange a coup at the base of the stalk, one on either side.

Another effective design for an aspic mol is a mosaic of squares cut from black truffle, blac olive or eggplant skin, and white of egg, beet an egg white, or red and green pepper.

The technique of placing a design on fis meat, or poultry coated with a chaudfroid sauc (velouté sauce stiffened with gelatin) or set may onnaise (mayonnaise with gelatin) is identica Again the pieces are dipped in aspic, placed, an chilled until set. However, here you must tak into account the paleness of the background an compose your design with colors that stand ou against it (or, if you want a white daisy or lily of-the-valley design, tint the chaudfroid sauc pale pink by adding tomato paste while it is stil hot and liquid). A delightful variation on the lily of-the-valley design is a mimosa spray. For this you mix the hard-cooked, sieved egg yolk with a little vegetable shortening to make it soft, put it in a tiny cone rolled from waxed paper, cut off the paper tip and squeeze like a miniature pastry bag to pipe mimosa blossoms along the tarragon stalk. Use the feathery leaves of dill as foliage.

Decorations for aspics and chaudfroids do not have to be intricate or time-consuming. One of the simplest and most attractive designs for the spine of a boeuf en gelée or chaudfroid-coated chicken breast is a row of overlapping mushroom slices, cut very thinly through stem and cap, and cooked briefly in water with lemon juice to keep their color and soften them slightly.

The traditional garnish for oeufs en gelée is merely a couple of blanched, crossed tarragon leaves. A design of slices of pimiento-stuffed olives makes an appropriate decoration for a ring mold of ham mousse in aspic. Part of the fun of this kind of garnishing is that the designs you make are limited only by your imagination and patience—witness the commedia dell' arte chicken in harlequin dress on page 128.

PORTABLE PATCHWORK NEEDLEPOINT

MBINING INDIVIDUAL SQUARES

If a few minutes now and a few minutes then are all the time you can spare for needlework, you can still put them to very effective use. Instead of having to tote a bag of materials everywhere you go, you can slip into your pocket a 3-inch-square needlepoint canvas plus all the yarn you need to complete it. To work a whole square takes only a few hours and you can join two or more to make any finished product you please, repeating the same pattern or scrambling different patterns to create a sampler effect. Sixteen squares make a pillow cover. The stitch is simple—either the half-cross stitch described in each mini-canvas packet or the continental or basket-weave stitch (see H&G, February, 1966). Individual packets, containing canvas, needle, wool yarn in four colors, graph pattern, and instructions, are $1.35 each. Sixteen packets of the same design plus all materials, including a corduroy back for a pillow cover, are $12.75. Write Windfall, 185 Adams Street, Bedford Hills, N. Y., 10507.

Street, has been influenced by the proximity of the Yorkville boutiques and specialty shops, which carry more dashing merchandise than the average Toronto store. On one side of Bloor is Lothian Mews, a compound of shops around a courtyard that turns restaurant in summer. On the other is a more ambitious project, the Colonnade -part apartment house, part office building—with a second-floor arcade of forty-nine tiny shops, three cafés, and a theatre-in-the-round that puts on lunchtime plays and satirical revues by an aptly named group, The Lunch Bunch. Pint-size the Colonnade shops may be, but their stock-in-trade is sophisticated and selective, culled from all over the world—Eskimo and Indian crafts at Canada Goose; Spanish and Mexican imports in Sheelagh's Shop; sheepskin and goatskin rugs (for a reasonable $16 and $39) at the English Sheepskin Shop; Indian silks and metalware at India Crafts. My favorite is Pampered Kitchens, an insouciant store of the practical and the frivolous, including carved breadboards and butter stamps, Porcelain de Paris saucepans, an early Ontario iron baking mold, a stalwart cast-iron Beefeater (who turned out to be a cover for a set of fireplace tools), and amusing English butcher-shop labels marked "Prime Skirt" and "Cowheels."

After whiling away a morning in the shops, I had a light lunch of beef salad, good bread, and cheese at the Café de la Paix, which has the air of an English tearoom crossed with a Continental coffeehouse.

Toronto, like Montreal, has a swift, smart, silent subway of which everyone is enormously and justifiably proud. The line runs crosstown at Bloor, downtown on Yonge Street, and uptown on University Avenue, a long loop that takes in almost any point you might want to see in the city's center ($1 nets you six subway tokens for the price of five, an encouragement our subways might copy).

Honest Ed's restaurant, once a warehouse, is cloaked with a wacky mixture of Art Nouveau, high camp.

On the subway route, and definitely worth a visit, is another source of civic pride, Toronto's new City Hall, designed by Finnish architect Viljo Revell, winner of an international contest of which the late Eero Saarinen was one of the judges. It is a graceful, breathtaking building, especially at night when the twin curving towers embracing the mushroom-like Council Chamber are left lighted and glowing. Inside, the effect is equally impressive. In the main hall, the central pedestal that supports the council chamber rises like a great tree trunk from a floodlit blue-carpeted pit. Offices are discreetly tucked away around its perimeter. This is one City Hall that the public can (and does) actively enjoy, eating in the cafeterias, reading in the library, sitting or strolling in the 13-acre plaza with its trees, flowers, and Henry Moore sculpture, or, in winter, skating on the artificially frozen pool.

From City Hall, I walked to the Royal Ontario Museum to see the large, magnificent Chinese art collection, and to its small neighbor, the Sigmund Samuel Canadiana Gallery tucked away at 14 Queen's Park Crescent West. Easily overlooked, this two-room museum of Canadian history, furniture, and crafts contains a highly selective sampling of exhibits, carefully grouped and identified, with the furniture and accessories arranged to suggest rooms of different periods; a living room of the English furniture used in early garrison towns; a bedroom with Victorian birds'-eye-maple village furniture; an attic full of bygones —rocking horse, bird cage fashioned like an Italianate house with a mansard roof and wrought-iron "lace," rugs and coverlets handwoven by the settlers. Display cases hold church carvings, a tôle lantern and chanticleer, carved wood maple sugar molds, and a most intriguing object—a pewter snow bird that was put on a roof to control the movement of snow.

While Toronto makes no claim to equal French-oriented Montreal in the number and reputation of its restaurants, the range is broad, the aim diversity rather than dedication to cuisine. Two forthright and cheerful purveyors of simple but good food are the Old World Cheese Shop at 36 Wellington Street East and Honest Ed's Warehouse. The Cheese Shop, in addition to selling cheese, has a help-yourself counter in a back room with salads, cold meats and cheeses, and wines, cocktails and Canadian beers to go with them. Honest Ed's Warehouse is a riotous establishment next to the Royal Alexandra Theatre on King Street. The owner, a merchant with a discount store on Bloor Street, bought the theatre, then the neighboring warehouse, the bare bones of which he gussied up with everything he could lay hands on—Tiffany lamp shades and Turkish-corner lamps, framed photographs of movie and stage stars, an assortment of chairs from the Salvation Army, a Model-T Ford, and the salvage from innumerable junk shops and attics. The effect is a weird, warm jumble, unaffected and utterly engaging. The food, limited to roast beef and Yorkshire pudding with a first course and dessert is reasonably priced and the service swift enough to satisfy the most fidgety theatregoer. On these counts, some of Toronto's more pretentious restaurants could learn from Honest Ed.

Upstairs, a double hexagon encloses a complex of master bedroom, bath, dressing room, sitting room

About half the second floor is consumed by the master bedroom. The remaining space is carefully segmented into a compartmented bath, dressing room, the stairway, and a little sitting room where Mr. Webb reads and has a pre-dinner nap. At the exact center of the bath-hexagon is a skylighted well.

Master bedroom, glassed on three sides, has a bay-view balcony and a bedside fireplace. For warmth, flooring is of wood, rather than tile. Throughout the house, ceilings are faced with deeply textured acoustical tiles so tightly butted they give the pleasant effect of rough plaster.

In the master bath, the five-sided shower compartment is tucked into an angle of the hexagon, back to back with the lavatory counter, so that both may economically share the plumbing stack.

Make a four-square pattern on a buttered slice of bread by covering one quarter with chopped egg yolk, the others with chopped egg white, chopped ham, chopped watercress.

Stuffed egg patterns Decorate the stuffed center of hard-cooked eggs with a row or circle of capers; a stripe of red or black caviar; a standing small slice of salami; a border of chopped olive; a pimiento shape, stamped with an aspic cutter; a "plant" made from a sprig of parsley in a pot cut from a carrot slice; a cross of blanched tarragon leaves with a pickled onion in the center; a twisted slice of dill pickle; an S-shaped twist of anchovy fillet with a caper in each curve; a miniature stuffed ham cone.

Vegetable border Dip vegetables (whole green beans, mushroom slices, carrot slices, zucchini strips, etc.) into batter, flavored with a suitable chopped herb, and deep fry. Drain, and use to ring a platter of hot appetizers.

Garnishes for Soup

Garnishing can make even a cup or bowl of soup more inviting. For a thick opaque cream soup or bisque, choose a garnish that will float on top. For a clear soup, select something colorful or shapely to put in the liquid or on the bottom of the bowl (a sprig of watercress, a thin slice of mushroom). Whenever possible, try to use one of the ingredients of the soup as the garnish: slice the carrots for a beef broth thin and stamp into shapes with aspic cutters; use half the required cream in a cream soup and just before serving, pipe swirls of whipped heavy cream on top, flavored, if you like, with horseradish, or salt and herbs.

Bolognese Make simple bread crumb and egg dumplings flavored with nutmeg and a generous quantity of grated Parmesan cheese. Poach and serve in chicken broth.

Crêpe Roll plain crêpes and slice them no wider than half-an-inch. Carefully place a rolled slice in the center of each serving of a clear soup. Or stuff tiny crêpes and fold like egg rolls, using them whole to garnish a plain soup. Try curried chicken in the crêpes for a chicken broth; sautéed onions and mushrooms for beef broth; sautéed eggplant and tomato flavored with garlic for vegetable broth.

Crouton Stamp out plain croutons with aspic or truffle cutters. Rub croutons with garlic or flavor with onion, garlic, or savory salt. Float on soup of any kind to add flavor.

Flowerette Cook broccoli or cauliflowerettes, or inch-long asparagus tips. Place in the center of each serving of a creamed soup.

Gazpacho Chop raw bell peppers, cucumbers, and hard-cooked egg. Sprinkle vegetables, egg, and croutons on hot or cold tomato or potato soup.

Milanaise Fry tiny meat or chicken balls and garnish any soup or broth with them.

Profiterole Pipe any appropriate savory filling into tiny profiteroles and float the little pastry balls on soup: pâté filling for clear chicken broth; mushroom purée for beef soup; minced lobster, crab, or shrimp bound with a very little mayonnaise, whipped cream, or velouté sauce for bisques.

Rigoletto Cut slices of firm, white bread with aspic or cookie cutters. Top these cutouts with a soufflé mixture and brown in the oven. Float on any soup that will be enhanced by the taste of the soufflé: Parmesan cheese on mutton or beef broth; chicken or ham on vegetable broth; shellfish on a bisque. For a simpler version of the Rigoletto garnish, coat prepared croutons with appropriate spreads: cream cheese dipped into chopped parsley for tomato or mushroom soup; poached beef marrow for clear beef broth; grated cheese melted under the broiler for tomato, onion, or chicken soup; prepared pâté for chicken broth.

Viviane Dice artichoke bottoms, carrots, and truffles. Cook in butter and sprinkle on creamed chicken soup.

Garnishes for Fish

Although lemons (sliced, in wedges, or imaginatively cut) are the classical garnish for fish, many other garnishes are also appropriate and complementary. Any of the vegetables to be served with fish can act as a garnish when arranged in a colorful, harmonious pattern, and in certain cases the ingredients of the dish itself become the garnish.

À la Russe Blanch cucumber cups and marinate them in lemon juice. Chill and fill with red or black caviar. Unmold mounds of Russian salad (mixed vegetable salad, with or without lobster and/or ham, bound with mayonnaise) at either end of a platter of cold salmon in aspic. Surround the fish with the cucumber cups alternated with halved, stuffed hard-cooked eggs.

Asparagus, Shrimp, Mushroom Neatly arrange boiled asparagus stalks in diagonal stripes down the length of a large, whole, bland fish which has been poached, skinned, and masked with a velouté sauce. Hook a cooked shrimp around each stalk, near the tip, and place a fluted, cooked mushroom cap at each stalk end.

Cardinal Arrange cooked lobster meat down the center of a bland fish, or alternate pieces of lobster meat and pieces of fish down the center of a platter. Mask the whole with a Cardinal sauce and sprinkle with the coral of the lobster, if any. You may substitute a light sprinkling of red caviar for the coral.

Cucumber and Seafood Fill cucumber cups with creamed or spiced hot shrimp or crab meat. Use as a garnish for any simple broiled fish.

Espagnole Fry chopped tomatoes and strips of pimientos separately in olive oil, adding a little pressed garlic during the cooking. French fry onion rings. Place fried fish fillets on a bed of the tomatoes down the center of a serving dish. Place the pimientos in mounds at either end, and the onion rings in overlapping circles down the center of the row of fish fillets.

Fleuron Cut scraps of puff pastry with aspic or cookie cutters. Bake and arrange around any sauced fish.

Gauloise Fill pastry barquettes with creamed mushrooms and sprinkle with chopped truffles. Use to garnish any fried, sautéed, or poached fish that goes with the flavor of mushrooms.

Joinville Bind cooked, small shrimp, truffles, and sautéed mushrooms with a velouté sauce. Arrange around poached fish fillets.

Matelote Sauté mushrooms and croutons; glaze white onions. Arrange mushrooms down the center of a fish in red wine sauce and disperse the onions and croutons along its flank. (The mushrooms may be fluted before sautéing.)

Mikado Fill tartlet cases with bean sprouts mixed with a light cream sauce seasoned with soy sauce. Add the chopped green part of a scallion or two. Alternate cases with mounds of curry-flavored rice around a fish masked with a curry sauce.

Mimosa Rice hard-cooked egg yolks and sprinkle liberally on any sauce-coated fish, hot or cold.

Niçoise Cut tomato wedges and quarter hard-cooked eggs. Boil and cool whole baby green beans. Boil and slice new potatoes. Arrange vegetables in a fan shape along one side of cold salmon or tuna. Outline the edge of the fish which touches the garnish with a row of Greek-style black olives. Pour oil and vinegar dressing over all.

Normande Steam oysters and mussels. Use their broth to make a rich velouté sauce. Make a row of six or seven thin truffle slices down the center of a baked or poached fish (sole, chicken halibut, small flounder), and scatter the shelled oysters and mussels and cooked shrimp and button mushrooms around it. Mask with the sauce.

Panetière As a variation of the Gauloise garnish, fill a large croustade with creamed mushrooms, and arrange doubled-over fish fillets around the croustade, like a crown.

Parsley and Noodle Alternate small mounds of fried parsley and sautéed noodles around any fish. Or, place one large bunch of fried parsley at one end of the fish and a large mound of sautéed noodles at the other.

Potato Salad in Tomato Braise hollowed-out tomatoes in the oven and fill with hot potato salad. Top with Béarnaise sauce and use to garnish any simple fish sauté, whole or fillets.

Véronique Make mounds of seedless white grapes at the side of a fillet of sole poached in white wine. Cover grapes and fish with a cream sauce and glaze. You may sprinkle the fish with almond slivers sautéed in butter if you wish.

Viennoise Chop hard-cooked egg white and yolk separately. Place in alternating mounds at the side of any fish. Top the mounds of chopped yolk with a rolled anchovy fillet. Between the mounds, place little stripes of capers, chopped olives, and chopped parsley. Surround the whole with wafer-thin half-slices of peeled and seeded lemon.

Garnishes for Meat and Poultry

The garnish for a main course of meat or poultry should provide an interesting gastronomic as well as decorative accompaniment to the food. Some of the following garnishes are for whole roasts of meat or poultry, others are intended for single portions or platters of sliced meat or pieces of poultry.

Algérienne Surround any whole roast meat or poultry with sweet potato croquettes alternated with mounds of small whole tomatoes that have been cooked in olive oil.

Alsacienne Arrange braised sauerkraut around or at both ends of a platter of goose, duck, or pork. Decorate with rounds of cooked sausage, placed on end, and plumped raisins. Or, alternate a piece or slice of meat with a mound of sauerkraut.

Andalusian Halve small green peppers, stuff with rice, onion, and sausage, and bake. Garnish any roast with the cooked peppers and sautéed eggplant slices topped with a stripe of chopped cooked tomato.

Baltimore Sauté a slice of tomato and top with a sautéed strip of green pepper. Place on top of an individual serving of grilled beef or chicken.

Bouquetière or Jardinière Select three or four vegetables with an eye to contrast of both color and shape—a whole cauliflower, baby carrots, hearts of Boston lettuce; broccoli with the stems peeled, whole wax beans, whole baby beets and white onions; whole small carrots, asparagus tips, celery. Boil or steam until just tender. Glaze with butter and arrange like a still life on a large tray holding a large cut of roast beef. This garnish is also appropriate for a cold roast of beef, in which case the vegetables should be cold and the glaze aspic.

Châtelaine Fill artichoke bottoms with a chestnut purée mixed with cooked rice. Sprinkle with bread crumbs and brown in the oven. Arrange around roast meat or poultry with mounds of browned potato balls and braised lettuce.

Cinderella Fill artichoke bottoms with a soubise (thick onion purée) mixed with finely chopped truffles. Arrange filled artichoke bottoms in a circle around slices of beef or chicken.

Clamart Fill tartlet shells or artichoke bottoms with a pea purée or peas à la Française and alternate them with potato balls or patties around any roast meat, with the exception of pork or chuck.

Dubarry Make balls of mashed, boiled cauliflower and coat with Mornay sauce. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in the oven. This is a suitable garnish for any meat or poultry. (When whole cauliflowerettes are cooked, coated, and sprinkled with bread crumbs, the garnish is called Hongroise.)

Durand Stuff a large ham cone with chopped and sautéed tomatoes. Put it on top of a mound of fried onions and surround with grilled chops, or slices of beef filet, or servings of broiled, fried, or grilled chicken.

Madeleine Make small timbales of puréed white beans and alternate them with soubise-filled artichoke bottoms around a platter of lamb or pork chops.

Mexican Arrange hot orange and avocado slices on both sides of sautéed chicken and mask them with an orange sauce.

Milanaise In the center of a platter, mound macaroni mixed with grated Parmesan cheese, butter, salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Sprinkle with shaved ham and white truffles (if available), and sautéed mushroom slices sprinkled with Madeira. Surround the mound with scallops of veal or chicken breasts.

Mirabeau Broil individual servings of steak on one side. Make a diamond design with anchovy fillets on unbroiled side. Place slices of stuffed green olives in the spaces between the anchovies. Broil this side.

Mireille Form duchesse potato mixture into croquettes and spread them with tomato purée. Place a small cut of meat on each potato croquette.

Petit-Duc Fill small puff-paste shells with creamed asparagus tips. Top artichoke bottoms with a slice of truffle. Alternate the two round forms around beef or lamb.

Richelieu Arrange sautéed love apples, potato balls, stuffed mushrooms, and braised lettuce around a roast.

Roman Make semolina gnocchi mixture, spread on a cookie sheet, cool, and stamp out with a cookie cutter. Sprinkle with cheese, bake, use as a border around cuts of meat or stews.

Rossini Put a sautéed slice of foie gras, topped with a slice of truffle, on grilled or sautéed tournedos, lamb chops, or suprêmes of chicken.

Spanish Place grilled halved tomatoes in a row down the center of liver slices on a serving dish. Place a border of fried parsley on one side of the liver and fried onions on the other.

Tivoli Place a sautéed tomato slice on an individual serving of meat. Top with a fluted, sautéed mushroom cap. Alternate with mounds of potato soufflé or duchesse potatoes.

have become the must-have version for collectors, it is not in every case the best presentation of the music. Take "Show Boat." Its first complete recording was made during the 1964 revival (Columbia OL 4058), and while this version has the excitement and tension a staged production nearly always provides, there is another, unusually fine recording of a complete studio performance by a specially assembled cast that included Metropolitan Opera stars Patrice Munsel, Robert Merrill, and Risë Stevens (RCA Victor LM 2008). "South Pacific" offers collectors a still wider choice: the original Martin-Pinza album (Columbia OL 4180), a 1962 recording of the complete score by the same stars (Columbia OS 1040), or the soundtrack of the movie made in 1958 by Mitzi Gaynor and Giorgio Tozzi (RCA Victor LOC/LSO 1032). There is a new recording of "Kismet," (London PM-55001/SP-44043) by Metropolitan luminaries Regina Resnik and Robert Merrill which almost turns that musical into an opera.

I do not pretend that my roster of great show music is all-inclusive. It omits many individually memorable numbers from scores which were otherwise so-so. It does not include the great theatrical successes of George Gershwin, Irving Berlin, Cole Porter. And I have consciously passed over the many songs made famous by unforgettable performers like Ethel Merman or Ray Bolger.

I have been guided only by the one criterion—the quality of the music. And after all it is the music that gives the musical its raison d'être.

HOW TO USE GARDEN GRASSES

Summer can be the most exciting season in your garden if you will give the ornamental grasses a chance to prove their worth. While most gardeners naturally provide for major floral interest during spring and fall, they often leave the garden supplied with little but foliage in the summertime. Foliage can be attractive and refreshing, of course, especially if the various forms and leaf shapes are arranged to provide interesting contrasts. And this is where grasses come into their own. For example, what was a dazzling mass of double-file viburnum in May could be an unkempt green mound by August but for the accent of two or three clumps of, say, gold-banded eulalia (Miscanthus sinensis zebrina) that you forehandedly placed in the foreground.

But why grass? First of all, these ornamental grasses are not grown for turf, but rather for decorative effect. Their most striking quality, and one that is uniquely their own, is motion both horizontal and vertical. The undulations of a clump of tall, free-growing grass in a summ breeze cast as strong a spell as cascading wa or the flight of doves. Almost as dramatic is t remarkable daily change in vertical dimensio that makes the ornamental grasses so effective the garden (page 111, for example). Giant re (Arundo donax) goes from ground level to feet in a single season. Plume grass (Erianth ravennae) will mature its foliage at 3 feet early midsummer, then suddenly, in a matter of a f days, in late August, send flower stalks to 8 fe

In plantings specifically designed for su mer interest, as apart from simply season change, grasses can play an especially importa part. A drift of the large round-leaved senec (Ligularia clivorum desdemona) that you plant for its orange, daisy-like flowers would be great enhanced by a background drift of golden-edg fresh-water cord grass (Spartina michouxiana a reomarginata). Well-chosen grasses also help ac stature to broad-leaf specimen plants. In a sen aded location, the big blue-green rosettes of a ell-grown leatherleaf mahonia (M. bealii) will em actually to sparkle against a fine-textured roundcover of blue fescue (Festuca glauca su-rba). A mass planting of switch grass (Panicum rgatum), narrow-leaved and foamy and tawny nk in flower, can do great things for a twisty d plant of red-leaf smoke tree (Cotinus coggy-ia atropurpurea).

Groundcover patterns, free-form or formalized geometric, can add great interest to any garden. And there are grasses to hance conventional groundcovers. In full sun, most striking effect results when you contrast asses of the blue-leaved oat (Avena glauca pen-la) with the broad gray fuzzy foliage of lambs-r (Stachys lanata). In shade, try clumps of the lden-striped lilyturf (Liriope muscara variega-) in a bed of the fine-textured green fescue (Fes-ca glauca virides). In really dense shade, plant ifts of the ornamental sedge (Carex pendula), hich technically is not a grass at all, but looks ke one, in a bed of the shiny kidney-shape foliage European ginger (Asarum europeum).

If you are not too concerned about traditional ring forms and colors in your garden, it is quite asible to make an entire garden of plants with grass-like foliage. In addition to the grasses the list includes bamboo (Phyllostachys aureosulcata and Arundinaria viridistriata), iris (in variety), brooms (cytisus in variety), genistas (Genista lydia and G. tinctoria floraplena), yucca (in variety), daylilies (hemerocallis in variety), lilyturf (Liriope muscari varieties and Ophiopogan japonicus), and scouring rush (Equisetum hymale).

Dramatic and exciting summer gardens can be made using plants conveying a tropical or jungle effect as mainstays. Here, in addition to great quantities of grasses, you can use devil's-walking stick (Aralia spinosa), Petasites japonica, hardy orange (Poncirus trifoliata), and sumac (Rhus typhina and R. typhina laciniata).

With a few exceptions, the use of ornamental grasses as garden plants on the east coast of the United States is relatively new. These recommendations are therefore tentative and subject to further trials. Following, and arranged according to mature height of flowers, are some of the varieties that have proven most satisfactory in the Wilmington, Del.–Baltimore, Md., area:

Giant reed (Arundo donax), 18 feet
Plume grass (Erianthus ravennae), 8 feet
Giant eulalia (Miscanthus sinensis giganteus), as high as 13 feet

Notes for August gardeners

Pruning, paving, and planting—pleasantly alliterative sidelines for the dog days

First weekend

Purposeful pruning. There are three principal pruning seasons for the gardener: late winter, late spring, and late summer. The first season when the plant is dormant is appropriate for pruning intended to influence the direction that new spring growth will take when once it begins. The second season is usually appropriate for finishing the work that would have been done earlier except for the desirability of permitting normal spring flowering to take place. The late summer season is especially appropriate for consolidating the progress induced in your plant as a result of the dormant pruning. In other words, late summer pruning is most often and most advantageously practiced to bring plant growth into conformation with a form or shape previously determined in late winter. This could amount to shortening a maverick stem on a bush, taking off the end of a twig headed in the wrong direction on a tree, or simply shearing a hedge, evergreen or deciduous, whose main dimensions were dictated by the dormant pruning.

This kind of pruning is recommended for late summer because it is unlikely to encourage excessive new growth, as a late winter pruning might do. Excessive new growth in the autumn is all too likely to be caught by frost—an end greatly to be avoided. But mild admonitory trimming now will scarcely challenge any plant to run riot.

Patterns for paving. In a world full of pre-cast "patio blocks," we sometimes tend to lose sight of all the handsome and time-tested paving materials for which patio blocks are supposed to be inexpensive substitutes. Money, of course, can go a long way to dictate your choice of terrace surfaces, what with marble costing as much as $7 or $8 a square foot and even cut bluestone topping a dollar in any but the thinnest sizes. But "new-old" brick (a ridiculous term that is applied to new brick made to look old) can be bought in metropolitan suburbs for $80 a thousand (32 cents a square foot) and broken stone for about twice as much. So the choice does not lie necessarily between one luxury and another. Nor need the choice be confined to one material alone.

A mixture of two materials—say irregular stone and soft colored brick, or Belgian blocks (granite) and cut stone, in formalized patterns—can provide interesting surfaces for garden areas. Along with color, pattern, and shape, texture then becomes important. The final effect is further conditioned by the kind of joint you use between the paving units. For the amateur workman (and his pocketbook) sand joints and a sand bed are preferable. But the case for permanent and impervious concrete and mortar can be persuasive, too. In either case, the visual effect will be different, increasingly so as time goes on and if frosts are able to contribute their unsettling pressures. Wood rounds, effective by themselves, do not team well with either brick or stone. Nor does random stone, which can be so effective as "crazy paving," make a good partner for cut stone. But stone and brick, in combination, seem to have a happy affinity for each other. Best of all, in a sand bed neither is hard to lay, although random thickness stone will require a little extra trowel work.

Third weekend

Paving plants. If you laid a new terrace surface last weekend, plant it now. Plant in the joints, of course, and only if the pavement elements have been laid in sand. Take a small pot label, and flip out some of the material between the stones or bricks in the selected locations. Then work small divisions of pavement plant seedlings down into the crevices. Keep them watered for a few days and the roots will strike down through the remaining sand and into the subsoil (if indeed there is subsoil and not gravel beneath the sand cushion). Obviously, to interplant on a consistent pattern or to plant each available space would be neither pretty nor practical, because, on the one hand, people would instinctively seek to avoid treading on the myriad plants and, on the other, no plant can long resist unlimited scuffing. So vary your plants; concentrate your plantings in places where everyday wear is likely to be least severe; place species that make spreading mats where their expansiveness will enhance rather than conceal the pattern of the pavement.

What plants to plant? First of all, probably, the thymes (you can get them as well as many other pavement plants from herb gardens), then perhaps chamomile, then the ordinary weedy creeping veronica (V. repens) that is such a pest in turf, but such a cheery note on a terrace. Try some of the smaller dianthus species between stones, where the usually pink blossoms will have a silvery gray background to set them off. Dianthus caesius is among the best for using in this way, as are the smaller hybrids and D. arenarius. And speaking of that one, try also the arenaria itself, commonly called sandwort. If you can be sure that traffic will not be too heavy, plant some of the brighter-leaved ajugas, and arabis, and Phlox stolonifera and Chrysogonum virginianum with its dainty gold flowers. In positions where feet seldom stray, Campanula rotundifolia and C. carpatica will do surprisingly well in a constricted crevice, but they will not withstand traffic. Germander (Teucrium chamaedrys) makes a sprightly little bush—again in traffic-free places. Most of the foregoing do best in sun. In shade, ferns are your best recourse, with ajuga, of course, and even little tufts of fescue grass. We have seen a neglected terrace that was charmingly populated, perhaps inadvertently and due to ignorance, with mouse-ear chickweed, knotweed, oxalis, and, so help us, dandelions among other common lawn weeds. Even buckhorn (narrow-leaved plantain) makes a striking terrace plant.

Summer planting. All of which brings to mind the general problems associated with planting and transplanting at this time of year. The worst of these, as a rule, is the maintenance of subsoil moisture while the days are still hot and the ground at almost its dryest stage for the year. Two things should always be remembered: first, to backwater the planting holes (fill the dug hole with water the night before planting and let the water drain away) and then to prevent, as well as you can, the loss of moisture from leaves and stems of the plant being set in place. Sometimes excessive moisture loss is best prevented by a few cool and overcast days. If you can't arrange that, then try frequent (estimate frequency by the degree of wilting) syringing or misting with a fogging nozzle attached to your hose. In many cases, especially with plants whose value outweighs their size, a shelter of stakes and burlap erected to sunward of the plant will make the necessary difference. Whatever you do before and after planting, work swiftly. Exposure of roots to dry air is almost as lethal as failure to dig carefully and provide good aftercare. If the plant is small enough, cover it for a few days with an old-fashioned peach basket. The slits in the basket will provide all the air circulation necessary, and there is no better way to conserve the plant's own moisture.

Reading Notice. A tired title writer must have supplied the name for Veva Penick Wright's So You Want to Grow Roses (Barre, $6.95). And more's the pity, because this unassuming but well-organized volume is charmingly and helpfully illustrated by dozens of pen drawings by Grambs Miller, who is obviously as fond of roses as she is deft at picturing them and their ways. Of rose books there seems to be no end; this is a pretty one to own, and a useful one, especially for the beginner, to consult.

Switch grass (Panicum virgatum), 6 feet
Golden-edge fresh-water cord grass (Spartina michouxiana aureomarginata), 6 feet
Asian eulalia (M. sinensis), 7 feet
Form with green-and-white vertically striped leaves (variegatus), 7 feet
Form with horizontal yellow bands or splotches on leaves (zebrina), 7 feet
Diminutive form with narrower leaves (minimus), 5 feet plus
Fountain grass (Pennisetum alopecuroides), 3 feet plus
Blue oat (Avena glauca pendula), 3 feet plus
Spear grass (Stipa capillata) 2½ feet plus
Blue wild rye (Elymus glaucus), 18 inches
Mosquito grass (Bouteloua oligostaechya), 2 feet plus
Ornamental sedge (Carex pendula), 12 inches
Green-and-white variegated form (C. morrowi variegata), 12 inches
Blue fescue (Festuca glauca superba), 12 inches
Green fescue (F. glauca virides), 12 inches
Velvet grass (Holcus lanatus), 10 inches

All of these will perform well in average soils to which a good supply of organic matter and some balanced fertilizer have been added. For maximum performance, the taller-growing varieties should have supplemental feedings every year. The evergreen grasses (Avena carex and the festucas) can be planted either spring or fall. Most others are better planted in spring or, if container-grown plants can be secured, in late spring or early summer. Except for carex, all will thrive in full sun. Festuca glauca and Miscanthus sinensis will tolerate partial shade. A moist location is desirable for arundo, carex. M. sinensis gigantea, and spartina. The others are satisfied with normal to dry conditions. Avena will do poorly if it's crown is not kept dry. The taller-growing varieties can get battered in summer storms and look messy unless some sort of artificial support is provided (stakes are best concealed in the center of the clumps). Because most grasses are also effective during early winter, it is desirable to cut them back only after snows and winds have damaged them enough to make them unsightly (this can be postponed until just before new growth comes in the spring). The festucas are the exception, handling well if cut back just after blooming in June.

In addition to summer pleasure, the ornamental grasses offer another bonus: all the taller varieties provide attractive flower heads that can be dried for winter arrangements. Several familiar natives belong in this category, such as common reed (Phragmites communis), poverty grass (Aristida dichotoma), brome grass (bromus species), and bristly foxtail (Setaria lutescens). Drying is best done by cutting the grasses when the flower head is at the stage of development you find most attractive, tying them in bunches, and hanging them upside-down in a place where they can remain dry and undisturbed until time for use.

Cuttings made at different times during the growing season produce bunches with distinctly different looking flower heads, hence increase the variety available for arrangements that will remain attractive all winter. But do not expect to get a flower head that will hold up well in an arrangement by allowing it to mature completely in the garden.

DOWNS QUALITY CARPETS

Our sterling owes its smoothnes to an island volcan and Kenneth Glenn

Every year we import a ton and a half of pumice from the volcanic islands around Pompeii.

Pumice has been polishing things for centuries. It works beautifully on sterling. But for us it's only a start.

We're not satisfied unless Kenneth Glenn does the finishing.

He uses a special buffing wheel made of 64 polishing cloths. 35 large. 29 small.

First he works each piece of sterling against the large cloths. Along handles. Around spoon bowls. Up and down fork tines.

Then he works each piece against cloths so small they can reach into curves. Around swirls. Even in between petals.

When Kenneth Glenn gets through, every inch of our sterling is glass-smooth.

Even in corners your fingers never touch.

Only then are we satisfied.

Only then is sterling worthy of our "IS" maker's mark.

You'll find that mark with the patterns you see here. And you can take advantage of special savings over open stock prices when you buy a basic service for 4, 8 or 12.

For a free color brochure showing all our patterns, please write The International Silver Company, Meriden, Connecticut.

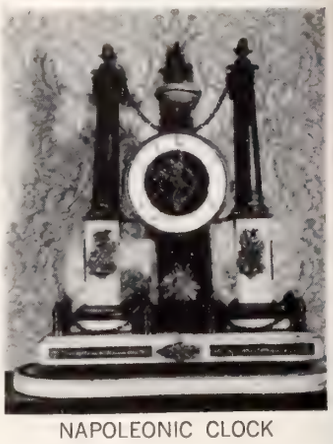
VICTORIAN GONDOLA CHAIR



This chair is one of a pair that own. They are said to be called William Penn chairs. Can you date them? J.W.F. Westport, Conn.

Although your side chair is strongly reminiscent of the splat-back gondola chair of the American Empire period, details of the arched top rail indicate that it is early Victorian, probably dating around 1840-1860. I have never heard of a chair of that period being called William Penn.

This clock has been in my family for several generations. It was made by Collard. Could you please tell me its approximate age?

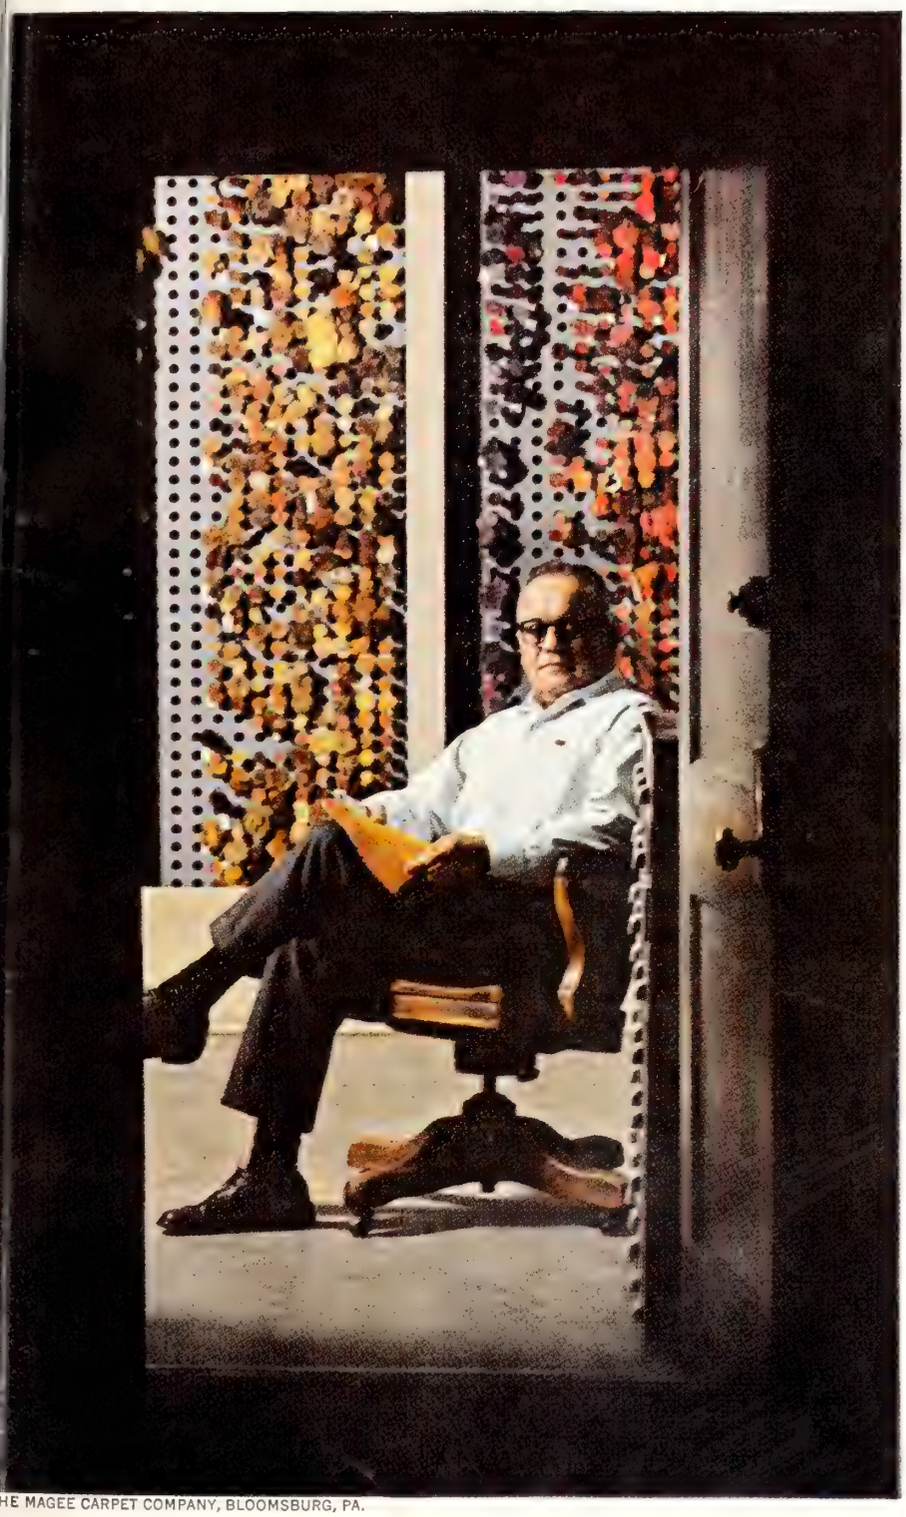
NAPOLEONIC CLOCK

EDGE, MALIN MARK

I have a set of willowware that has been in the family for years. Can you tell me anything about it from the enclosed mark that appears on each piece? J.H.D.—Long Island City, N. Y.

Your china was made by Edge, Malin & Co., Burslem, Staffordshire. The firm used this mark from 1873 to 1903. "Mysore" was the pattern.

Any information you can give me about this piece, known as a Water Lily Lady, will be appreciated. On the bottom, in a triangle, is the letter E surrounded by "Royal Dux Bohemia" and above the triangle is the number 621. R.W.T.—Kansas City, Mo.



ROYAL DUX BUST

Royal Dux was first made in Bohemia in 1860, but the romantic style of your bust is typical of the art of the final years of the nineteenth century. 621 was the model.

THE MICHELANGELO OF BLOOMSBURG, PA.

How come everything that's the same color isn't the same color? For example, every carpet maker makes an olive carpet. And you know what? They're all different. That's what makes our master dye-master a master.

He knows that every carpet has to look as great in your home as it does in the store. (There it has to look great.)

So our olive has to be your olive. Not too red. Or too yellow. Or too brown. And it has to stay that way.

That takes an awful lot of human know-how. You see, we can't trust machines completely. After all, how can you build taste into one?

We learned everything we know by making carpet, and nothing else, for more than 75 years.

It's something you should think about. Because there's more to a carpet color than meets your eye.

That's why we made the CAROUSEL!

It's not an easy job for one organ to keep the whole family happy.

So how does Allen do it?

"Swinging Hammers!" An entirely new concept. And only the CAROUSEL has it.

Guitar, mandolin, harp, banjo—each one springs to life when played by Allen's patented "Swinging Hammers." Hold a note or a chord. The hammers do the strumming for you . . . or the picking . . . or plucking . . . or rolling . . . or twanging.

Then press the organ couplers—bring everything into play for the big happy sound that has everyone talking.

Play it like a traditional organ. You'll hear a new richness in all your old favorites—even classical and church music become more inspiring with Allen's authentic organ tone.

The CAROUSEL is beautifully handcrafted, in six distinctive styles. Why not send for more information?

For the younger scholars in your LASSICAL GREECE is an immensely informative field trip, an exciting supplement to their regular studies in history, art, government and geography.

Introducing the Great Ages of Man series

Written by Sir Maurice Bowra, one of today's foremost historians, CLASSICAL GREECE is the first in a series of important intellectual adventures brought to you by the Editors of TIME-LIFE Books. Under the heading, GREAT AGES OF MAN, each volume presents one of the high points, one of the most inspired periods in human history. In text and pictures, they capture for you the great forward leaps of man's imagination in every field of his endeavor.

The format of CLASSICAL GREECE is typical of the series. Bound in lifetime Kivar and cloth and stamped in gold leaf, it is art book size: 8¾" x 10¾". Nearly 200 pages, it is printed on a heavy stock which is chemically treated to bring out all the subtle tones of the illustrations. The book contains over 130 photographs—80 in color—of art works, fabled ruins and famous places. Five specially-commissioned maps, as well as aerial views, make particular periods and locations dramatically clear.

Ordinarily, a book of this size, scope and beauty—comparable to a deluxe art book in the number and quality of its color plates—would have to cost at least $7 or $8. But the price to you—thanks to our large print orders—is only $3.95. Exclusive with TIME-LIFE Books, CLASSICAL GREECE is not available elsewhere.

And with your first volume, at no extra cost, comes a specially-written, 5,200 word introduction to GREAT AGES OF MAN entitled "What Man Has Built" by Jacques Barzun, distinguished scholar, critic and social historian.

Read the book first—Decide later

You are invited to examine CLASSICAL GREECE in your own home for ten days—absolutely free. If you and your family are not satisfied in every way, simply return it and we'll consider the matter completely closed. If you feel that CLASSICAL GREECE is a book you'll use and enjoy for years to come, pay only $3.95 plus shipping and handling. Then you will receive future volumes at regular two-month intervals—also for a free 10-day examination.

The order form commits you to nothing more than the pleasure of browsing through a strikingly handsome and uncommonly absorbing book. There is absolutely no cost or obligation, so why not complete the form and send it now? (If the order form is missing, write to TIME-LIFE Books, Time-Life Building, Chicago, Illinois 60611.)

HUNGER IS ALL SHE HAS EVER KNOWN

Margaret was found in a back lane of Calcutta, lying in her doorway, unconscious from hunger. Inside, her mother had just died in childbirth.

You can see from the expression on Margaret's face that she doesn't understand why her mother can't get up, or why her father doesn't come home, or why the dull throb in her stomach won't go away.

What you can't see is that Margaret is dying of malnutrition. She has periods of fainting, her eyes are strangely glazed. Next will come a bloated stomach, falling hair, parched skin. And finally, death from malnutrition, a killer that claims 10,000 lives every day.

Meanwhile, in America we eat 4.66 pounds of food a day per person, then throw away enough garbage to feed a family of six in India. In fact, the average dog in America has a higher protein diet than Margaret!

If you were to suddenly join the ranks of 1½ billion people who are forever hungry, your next meal would be a bowl of rice, day after tomorrow a piece of fish the size of a silver dollar, later in the week more rice—maybe.

Hard-pressed by the natural disasters and phenomenal birth rate, the Indian government is valiantly trying to curb what Mahatma Gandhi called "The Eternal Compulsory Fast."

But Margaret's story can have a happy ending. For only $12.00 a month, you can sponsor her, or thousands of other desperate youngsters.

You will receive the child's picture, personal history, and the opportunity to exchange letters, Christmas cards — and priceless friendship.

Since 1938, American sponsors have found this to be an intimate, person-to-person way of sharing their blessings with youngsters around the world.

So won't you help? Today?

AMERICAN COIN TESTER

The tin object, which I have sketched, is 1¹⁵⁄₁₆ inches long and 2¼ inches wide. It has the mark S S Co on it. It was bought in an antique shop in Vermont. Can you tell me what it was used for and about how old it is?
D.H.—Port Arthur, Tex.

You have an American coin tester, which was used to spot counterfeit silver coinage. It dates between 1870 and 1890. We have not been able to trace the firm of S S Co.

AMERICAN EMPIRE BENCHES

THE BENCH AT ROSEDOWN

M.F.A.'S BENCH

I am enclosing a photograph of a window bench which I purchased from a dealer in New York State several years ago. One of the photographs of the Rosedown restoration in the January, 1964 issue of House & Garden includes a bench which appears to be almost identical to mine and which is identified only as an "1810 mahogany bench." I would be most grateful for any further information you can give me. M.F.A.—Fayetteville, N.C.

Your bench is indeed similar, although not quite identical, to the one at Rosedown. These American Empire benches were known as "cornucopia" benches because each end is shaped to follow the contour of a stylized version of that symbol of abundance and prosperity. Fruits and flowers are carved at the mouth of the cornucopia while the horn continues in a broad unbroken curve to form the seat rail. The motif was most widely used from 1820-1830, which is probably when your bench was made. In the most graceful examples (including yours and the one at Rosedown) there is enough space in the curve below the upholstered top for a small bolster or "squab." The Curator at Rosedown believes their bench to have been one of the earlier ones, made in New York about 1810.

MUSEUM VILLAGE:

Mystic Seaport

evokes the life of a maritime community 100 years ago

By Anne Stagg

One of the most appealing things about the small, nineteenth-century Connecticut museum village known as Mystic Seaport (to distinguish it from the present-day town of Mystic, closer to the mouth of the Mystic River), is its unchanged, largely unstaged, tremendously romantic link with the sea. The magic of the sea pervades this salty town today in probably much the same way it did a century or so ago. As you walk the sea-smelling streets, gulls wheel screaming overhead; the light, striking the white and plum-red buildings, has that rare seaside shimmer: the sounds of hammering and sawing drift up from the harbor; swirled piles of heavy ropes and massed groups of sea kegs seem imminently destined for a long ocean voyage; and when you are still some distance from the waterfront itself, the sky above the low housetops becomes cross-hatched with a dense network of masts, ratlines, and shrouds. As you round the last corner onto the cobblestoned waterfront street, you quite expect to come upon a full-blown nineteenth-century scene complete with scurrying sailors and tearful wives. The actuality, however, is not a disappointment.

Superb tall-masted nineteenth-century sailing ships—schooners, a square-rigger, and the prize of all, the last surviving nineteenth-century wooden whaler in America—are moored at the wharves, and crowding close along the curve of the harbor is a picturesque clutter of ships' outfitting shops, boat sheds, sail and rigging lofts, and a tavern. The scene is wonderfully satisfying and does not seem staged. One of the qualities that makes Mystic Seaport memorable and endearing is this essential unselfconsciousness and simplicity. The charm of the little town lies in its marvelously evocative atmosphere of a nineteenth-century port; the architecture of the individual buildings is of less importance. It seems quite natural that in this hard-working maritime community, the building of ships should have taken pride of place over the architecture. The ships are breath-takingly beautiful; the dwellings and other buildings are for the most part lean, rugged, practical, although their spare outlines often have another kind of beauty, forthright and proud.

In its heyday, Mystic was one of the most important and most productive seaports in New England. Located on the banks of a sheltered inlet off Long Island Sound (a sort of miniature version of the one at nearby New London), it was an ideal place for shipbuilding, which became the town's major industry. At the peak of its activity, from 1850 to 1870, the seaport is said to have turned out a greater tonnage of sailing ships and steamers than any other port of comparable size in America. Moreover, Mystic men were adventurous, filled with sea fever. The port had its own fleets of clippers and whalers in which Mystic men sailed as far away as the South Seas or even around the world.

Today, Mystic Seaport is located, appropriately enough, on the site of the old George Greenman & Co. Shipyard, one of nineteenth-century Mystic's most famous yards. In 1941, when the recreation of the village first began, a few old buildings already stood on the site—primarily the houses of the Greenman family, plus a scattering of sheds, shacks, and barns that had been part of the shipyard. To these were added, over the following years, other nineteenth- (and a few eighteenth-) century buildings assembled from other New England towns: the taproom in the tavern came from New Hampshire; a 1768 house arrived by barge from Old Saybrook; a chapel and a "little red schoolhouse" were transplanted from locations near New London; a shipsmith shop was moved from a wharf at the Massachusetts whaling town of New Bedford; a sail loft came from another famous Mystic yard, the old Charles Mallory Shipyard, and so on. Despite their different origins, the assembled buildings have an entirely homogeneous quality that makes the village look as if it had always been precisely the way it is now. Contained on thirty-seven grassy, river-bank acres, shaded by many trees and traversed by a simple system of small streets, lanes, and paths, the seaport can be easily encompassed in a full day, although someone with a particular passion for sea lore and artifacts could spend much more time there, since Mystic Seaport claims to have one of the finest and most voluminous collections of maritime treasures in existence.

The seaport's sights

There are two entrances to Mystic Seaport, one at the northern end of town, and one at the southern end (each across from large free-parking areas). To get your bearings it is well to pick up a map of the village at either of the information booths. To sort out the mass of little buildings drawn on the map, it helps to notice that there are two parts to the town. Forming a quadrangle near the North Entrance are most of the full-fledged museums, plus a maritime research library. The remaining area consists of the seaport village itself with its houses, its shops, and its ships.

Of the museum collections, the biggest and perhaps most absorbing is housed in the ivied-brick Stillman Building. In its large rooms overlooking the water, there are fascinating displays of such things as scrimshaw, models of every imaginable kind of ship and boat from all over the world, sea chests, ships-in-bottles, even a chair-in-a-bottle, a case of intriguing South Sea objects collected by Robert Louis Stevenson in his travels, another case with clothes worn by Richard Henry Dana II when he sailed around Cape Horn in 1834 and returned to write Two Years Before the Mast. In one immense hall, brilliantly painted figureheads are mounted high around the walls like hunting trophies.

Catercorner to the Stillman Building, the connecting Mallory and Wendell Buildings house the collections of a clipper-ship captain and of shipbuilder Charles Mallory. Some of the highlights: the model of a Japanese junk beautifully cast in silver; the amusing, lavishly bosomed figurehead of the Saucy Sally; several cases of superb ivory objects—chess sets, ship models, card cases, Chinese puzzles—brought back from the China and India trade.

These Mystic museums make a splendid start to seeing the town. Your mind swirls with a sense of the robustness and adventuresomeness of the seaport. Before leaving the quadrangle, you might drop into the handsome, dazzling white, elm-shaded Meeting House with its fine four-square clock tower. Once a Seventh Day Baptist Church not far from its present site, the Meeting House is now used for frequent showings throughout the day of a brief film called New England Sea Community, notable primarily for its excellent footage on whaling. For the maritime bibliophile, the G. W. Blunt White Library next door to the Meeting House boasts an excellent research library on every aspect of maritime history from whaling to oceanography.

On green in front of Meeting House, immense anchor—as arresting as a powerful sculpture.

With this background, you are now ready to head for the waterfront village. On the way are massive anchors studding the grass here and there—their great shapes as powerful as sculpture—and lawns outlined with anchor chains. In the village, there are three houses to be viewed. The most modest of the three, the Edwards House, stands on the waterfront Seaport Street. Two-floored and tiny, it was built somewhere between 1805 and 1825, and is sparsely furnished, as the home of a sailor and his family was likely to be. Looking at the hand pump at the sink, the wood-burning stove, the rudimentary cooking utensils makes you acutely aware of the hardship of life in those days.

The 1768 Buckingham House, at the head of Village Street, is perhaps the most appealing of the three houses. Sturdy, generously proportioned, constructed of reddish brown clapboard, it has a typical plan of two rooms up, two down, built around a large central chimney. The elements of the rooms are simple: a Queen Anne desk; an eighteenth-century corner cabinet filled with a collection of pewter; paintings of seventeenth-century ships; four-poster canopied, quilt-covered beds; pine rockers, and such. At the back of the house is a much older (1690 or so) kitchen ell, a wonderful, pine-sheathed room with diamond-paned, leaded casement windows, low ceilings, wide reddish brown floorboards, and a vast stone-hearthed fireplace that takes up nearly one entire wall. Outside the kitchen is a fragrant garden planted with herbs common to eighteenth-century England.

A few minutes from the Buckingham House, you come to the Greenman House on Stillman Lane, built in 1842 for Thomas Greenman, youngest of the three brothers who established the shipyard. A white frame house, it stands behind an ornate black iron fence, has a deep porch on two sides, and is typically early Victorian. If you are an addict of Victoriana, the interior will be a feast. Rooms are crowded with overstuffed furniture, rockers, cloth-covered side tables topped with at least half-a-dozen ornaments and framed pictures, tiered corner cupboards laden with bric-a-brac. Walls are covered with flowered wallpapers, with cameos, oil portraits, oval mirrors. Floors have wall-to-wall flowered carpeting and are dotted with china dogs for propping open doors. One handsome detail: the ruby red glass panels that frame the front door and blaze richly when fired by a shaft of sunlight.

The rest of the town is best savored at a puttering pace. You can drop into the cooperage to watch ship's barrels being made; visit the shipsmith shop where the red-hot forge hearths are often busy with repair work for the old sailing ships at the wharves; look in at the Mystic Press redolent with the smells of inks where two very old men (at least when I was there) turn out pages of century-old news and whaling ship prints

swimwear by DeWeese

NOW – REDUCE the SIZE of HIPS, WAIST, THIGHS and ABDOMEN, while you rest at home! How? By using a Relax-A-cizor for about ½ hour a day!

There's no work! No weight-loss! Relax-A-cizor is the effortless way! Easy to use! All you do is place pads near the figure area you want reduced in size, turn a dial—and you're doing your beauty exercise – while you REST!

BEAUTY EXERCISES? Yes – but not the tiresome kind.

Relax-A-cizor exercise is different. This remarkable device gives the muscles that serve to "hold-in" hips, waist, abdomen and thighs a form of exercise that doesn't require any effort on your part! (You REST!)

HERE'S HOW IT WORKS! Many women lack good muscle tone because they don't get enough exercise. Relax-A-cizor gives effortless, concentrated exercise to such figure areas as hips, waistline, tummy and thighs. Regular use causes these areas to reduce in size measurably to the extent these muscles lack tone because of insufficient exercise. And the less the muscle tone, the greater the degree of size reduction.

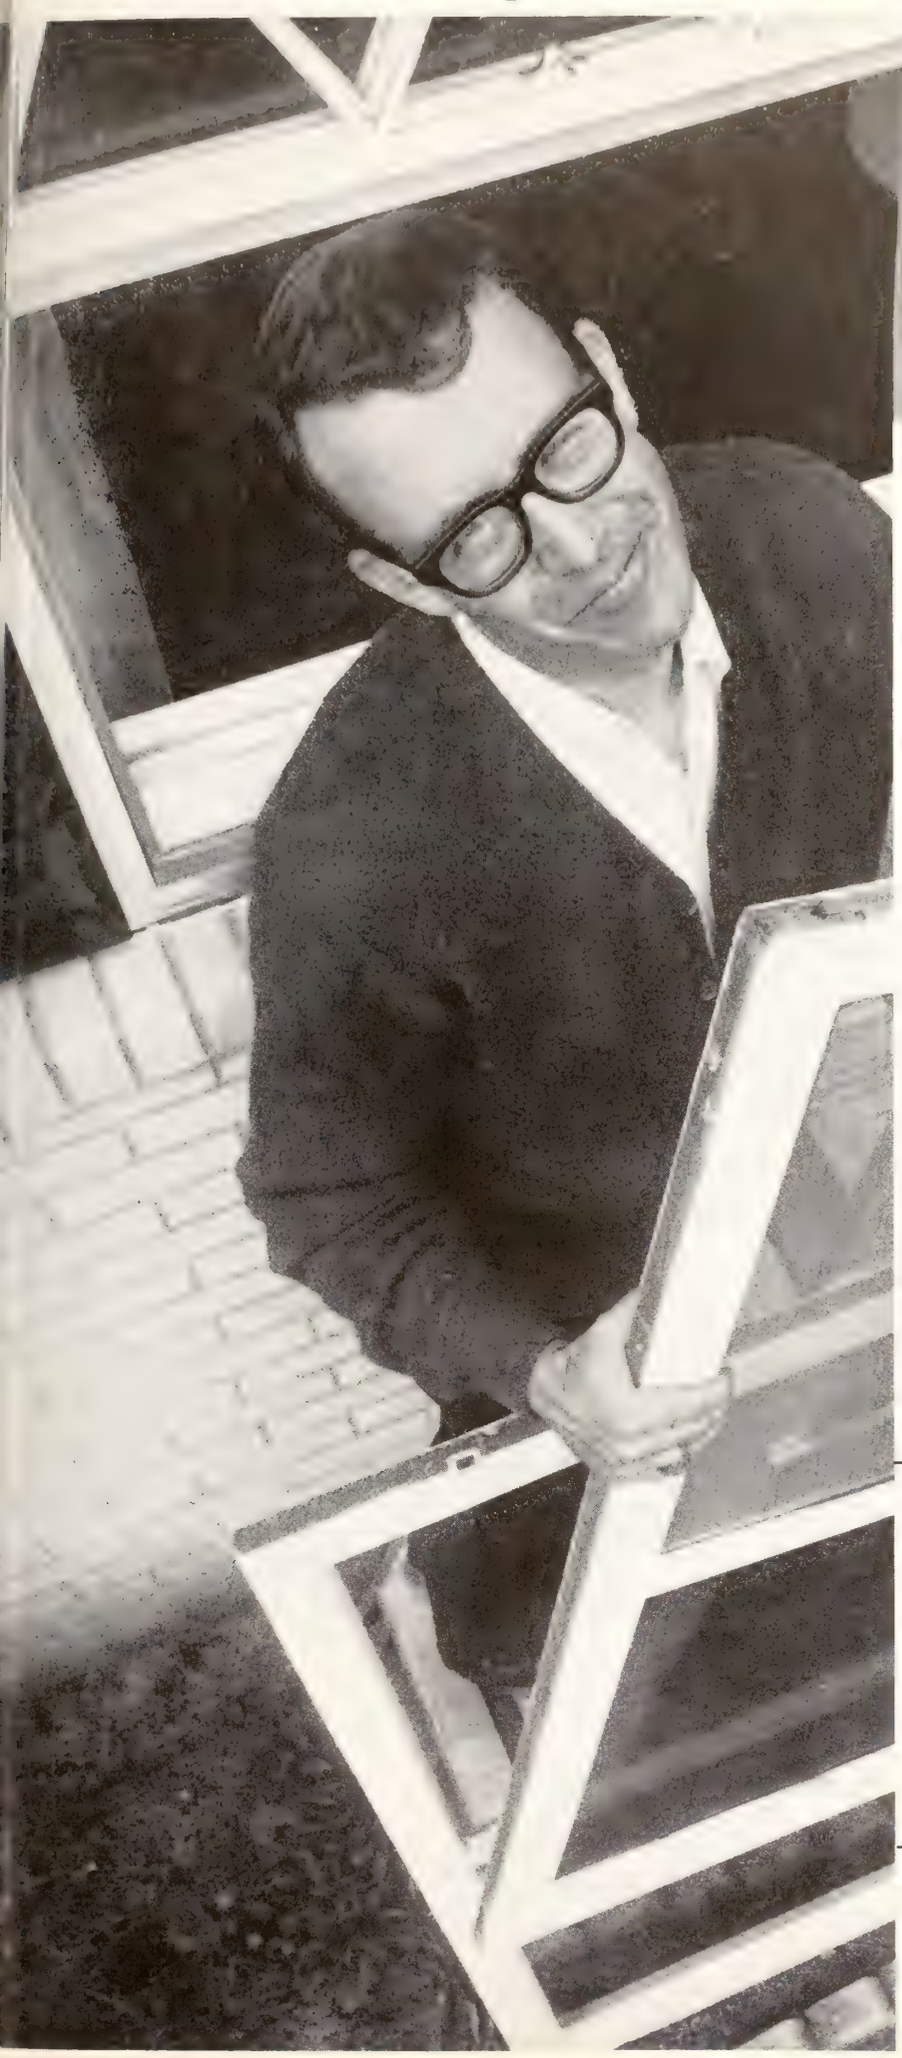
There is also a counting house (in a small, porticoed building said to be the second oldest bank building in Connecticut), a weaving shop, a rope walk, a firehouse, a wood-carver's shop, a hoop maker's shop, and the tavern. But perhaps the most evocative place of all is a three-story building that houses the N. G. Fish ship chandlery on the ground floor and sail and rigging lofts above. The chandlery brims with intriguing, diverse wares from quill pens, tar hats, ropes, sails, and paints, to Guernsey frocks, mittens, and brandy (none are for sale). In the two immense lofts upstairs you can hear about the intricacies of sail and rigging making from venerable craftsmen. The day I was there, the keeper of the sail loft was a white-haired mariner who joined his first ship when still a boy and knows the sea as well as his own name. This is typical of many of the Mystic Seaport craftsmen—ships and the sea have been their whole lives. Now, grown old and land-locked, the men are doing the next best thing—talking about their passion. Their enthusiasm is invigorating.

On Village Street, one block in from the waterfront, you will find a general store with such items as high-button shoes, buttons, barrels of provisions; a one-room, red schoolhouse; a lovely, slender-spired white chapel with a ceiling reminiscent of an upside-down ship's keel; and an apothecary shop with a windowful of beautiful colored glass bottles and medicine bottles displaying such oddities as "Chocolate Coated Compressed Tablet Aphrodisiac" and "Madame Dager's Elixir for the Cure of Fits." Nearby, on Stillman Lane, there is a clock shop with an incredible collection ranging from sundials to early alarm clocks. If you stand still for a moment after entering the shop and listen, you can hear the combined ticking of eighty-five clocks (they take close to an hour to wind). It is an entrancing sound.

Still other sights remain to be seen: the planetarium which offers frequent shows; the Junior Museum which has such things as a miniature mast with ratlines and shrouds for children to climb; and finally the sailing ships themselves, several of which you can visit, including the most fascinating of all, the wooden whaleship, the Charles W. Morgan, launched in 1841, which you can explore right down to its lower hold stowed with tiers of casks once used for whale oil.

Before leaving, you will also probably want to drop in at one of the two Seaport Stores near the South Entrance, where you can buy such miscellaneous wares as sailing gear, cans of clam chowder and clam fritters, jars of pickles, smoked cheeses, honey, candy, reproductions of nineteenth-century pewter, glass, and china typical of the seaport, ship models, and many other things.

When to go: The seaport is open from 9:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. every day of the year, except Thanksgiving and Christmas Day. The milder, green months are, quite naturally, the favorites, and apt to be more crowded. But sunny winter days can be splendid, too, when the crisp sea air invigorates, the winter sea light dazzles.



Where to eat: The Seamen's Inne outside the North Entrance has a cafeteria open during the seaport's hours and a more expensive dining room which stays open through dinnertime. You can also get snacks, in summer, at The Pantry and The Clam Shack on the grounds—the former near the South Entrance, the latter on the waterfront.

Where to stay: Three motels within a mile of Mystic Seaport are: The Old Mystic Motor Lodge, and The Seaport Motor Inn, both at the intersection of Routes 95 and 27 (neither has a restaurant, but there is a Howard Johnson's adjacent to the Lodge); and the Mystic Motor Inn at the intersection of Routes 1 and 27, which has a restaurant and bar. In the town of Mystic, you can stay at the simple, typically New England style Whaler Inn on East Main Street. If you plan a sea-borne arrival, you can make arrangements to reserve dock space for an overnight stay by writing to the Harbor Master, Mystic Seaport, Mystic, Conn.

Ornate black iron fence—a typical Victorian detail—frames chapel, makes graceful pattern when silhouetted against white, white walls.

ow does love of reading begin? For millions hildren it has started with membership in BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM — roven program of reading enrichment, tested approved by teachers, and loved by par-s, teachers and tots alike. The country's est children's reading program, it is the y one that offers BEGINNER BOOKS by . SEUSS and other gifted writers and artists.

A whole parade of sunny, funny books in rds young children know or can easily learn!

Belonging to the program is a joy for boys l girls. For BEGINNER BOOKS tell fasci-ing tales about such fabulous creatures as a fly who can write in the sky...a lovable ani-l who can take off his polka dots and put m on people...a cat who wears a hat and balance umbrellas, fishbowls and layer es on his paws!

But the importance of the BEGINNING ADERS' PROGRAM goes far beyond the ghtful stories and glorious illustrations. r at the same time that it makes reading fun your child, this planned program subtly ps your child "stretch" his reading and rning abilities.

Each BEGINNER BOOK rewards your ld for reading with its humor and excite-nt...reinforces his desire to read because it kes reading easier...reassures your child h a successful reading perience.

Four isn't too early... Eight isn't too late

The time to bring the pro-m into your child's life ow, during the critical rning years from 4 to 8. e books are just right children who are be-ginning to read; they're perfect, too, for reading aloud to pre-schoolers, who become even more eager to start reading on their own.

As reading authority Margaret Maxwell wrote recently in FAMILY CIRCLE magazine about BEGINNER BOOKS, "Children enjoy books that make them laugh...we both chuckled our way through (Dr. Seuss') rollicking rhymes. Quite casually, without formal effort on my part, Robert learned to recognize the words in these simple stories, and by the time he was five years old, he was a beginning reader."

BEGINNER BOOKS are durably designed to live with a small child. They're printed in at least three bright colors and large readable type. As a member of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM, your child will receive a BEGINNER BOOK every month and you will be billed only $1.49 plus a small mailing charge, instead of the publisher's catalog price of $1.95. After four monthly selections, you may cancel membership at any time.

Let DR. SEUSS and his friends delight your child for 10 days FREE!

We invite you to prove the benefits of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM by accepting the three books shown here — a $5.85 value at the publisher's catalog price — for $1.49. Even this small investment in your child's reading and school progress carries no risk. Ten days' FREE trial must convince you the program will stimulate your child's appetite for reading, or you may return the three introductory books and owe nothing. WHAT'S NEW for living

GLORIOUS WEATHER TO WAKE UP ON

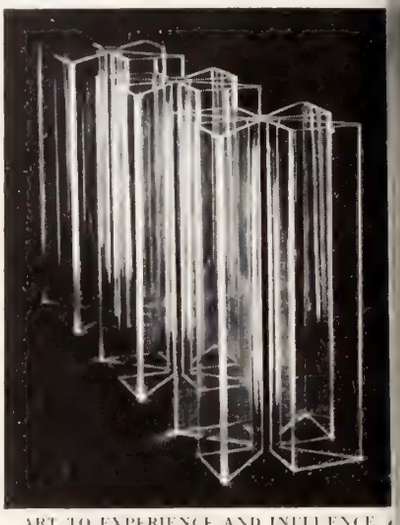
Sleeping on a cloud. Artist Geoffrey Hendricks has given tangible form to the old cliché by painting sky blue sheets, pillowcases, and lightproof window shades with masses of fluffy clouds. Clothes-pinned to a rope, they seemed the most likely to be produced of the might-someday-happen, one-of-a-kind art for consumers exhibited at the Museum of Merchandise Show of the recent Philadelphia Arts Festival.

Girard's first furniture. Famous for his joyful, color-crammed assemblages of artifacts and his gaily elegant interiors, architect Alexander Girard has now created twenty-five furniture designs that are cleanly articulated sweeps of pure shape. Among the daring details are dynamic combinations of fabric in two or more colors or patterns on each sofa or chair.

Instant rehabilitation. New York City will have nine happenings this month that may suggest a way around the seemingly never-ending chaos of major remodeling. By quadrupling the normal number of workmen and using preassembled kitchen and bathroom units, decaying tenements will be transformed into clean, spacious apartments inside of fourteen days, while the people who live in them are put up in nearby hotels. "Not the only answer to urban renewal, but a valuable technique that is important because it keeps neighborhoods intact," comments Robert C. Weaver, Secretary of the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

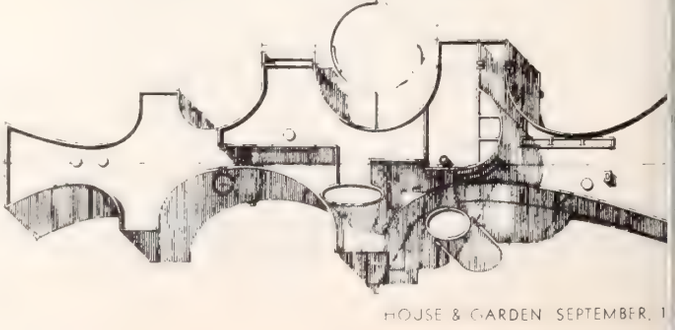
Brilliant ideas. Almost everybody has had one which "If I ever did anything with it . . ." And some people do. Among the brilliant ideas to be aired this month at the International Inventors Exhibition are portable saunas, burglar discouragers that bark like a dog, moon tools, a portable solar picnic grill, self-lifting steam irons, and all manner of things you had probably planned to invent yourself someday. The exhibition will be held at the New York Coliseum, September 7-15.

LOBBY LIFE, AS SEEN FROM BALCONY



The inside space race. In some of the grand old hotels—the Brown in Denver, the United States in Saratoga—roof-high center spaces were used to create soaring, awe-inspiring lobbies, but theirs were dwarfs compared to the 21-story column of air, big enough to contain the Statue of Liberty, in Atlanta's new Regency Hyatt House. Also visible from each floor's balcony-corridor are the whimsical Tivoli-Garden-inspired glass elevator cages as they zoom up from the lobby toward the skylighted roof. The whole idea suggests dramatic possibilities, on a smaller scale, for the open interior spaces of houses in the new vertical style.

A NOTED WEAVER REACHES FOR CONFINEMENT



New kind of objet d'art. Leonore Tawney, a master craftsman whose large woven flax hangings are in the permanent collections of several museums, has abandoned her loom. She is now at work filling little boxes, some with intricate meshings of flax, others with feathers. The new work will be introduced at New York's Willard Gallery, September 26.

Sculptured light. Preston McClanahan's Lucite labyrinths glow and pulsate as changing colors flow through pinholes in center cores. Hopefully, the fascination of artists with what they call electronic sculpture will spur creativity in decorative lighting design.

ART TO EXPERIENCE AND INFLUENCE

Historic three-year-old. Not far from Concord Bridge, in the midst of Paul Revere country, stands one of Massachusetts' newly designated historic monuments—a modern concrete house that is a 150-foot-long series of undulating walls. It was designed a bit over three years ago by architects Thomas and Mary McNulty, who live in it with their three young sons. Another nearby historic dwelling: the 1938 Walter Gropius house in Lincoln.

Notes for the Hostess

BY MARY MOON HEMINGWAY

Party plan for a balmy September evening: a rambling indoor-outdoor dinner. Cocktails on the terrace followed by the first course—thin mushroom broth served from a large silver coffee urn. The guests free to wander where they will, cup in hand. Main course waiting in gala array in the dining room: standing rib roast (hotel cut, ordered from hotel supplier), bunches of white asparagus fanned out on a round platter and interspersed with neat mounds of baby Brussel sprouts; on another round platter, buttered potato balls arranged in a pattern with small whole carrots. Small tables set up indoors and outdoors, each guest to be seated according to his mood. To the library for dessert: a great punch bowl filled with hot brandied macédoine of fruit and ringed by tiny macaroons. Amen to summer.

To dream about or break the bank for: Porthault's series of exquisitely fine embroidered place mats, "Les Vins de France." Each is different, each embellished with a château or vignoble and a bit of the map of the region—Beaune, Montrachet, Yquem, nine more. The dozen together take you on a tour of the vineyards of France. Within the realm of the practical: wipeable place mats composed of Porthault's own cotton prints laminated to plastic with foam backing. You can get round ones with scallops, other shapes, too.

Magnificent party dessert that makes itself while you are otherwise employed: store-bought angel-food cake plucked from your freezer (worth keeping two or three always on hand), defrosted, allowed to stand all day in sauce concocted of concentrated orange juice and orange marmalade cooked up together. (Be sure the well is filled with sauce, too.) Last-minute fix: a jigger of Cointreau poured over the sauce-filled cake, a coat of whipped cream, a sprinkling of slivered almonds. You might call it a third cousin of English Trifle and of Italian Zuppa Inglese.

For the soon-to-be-here days when fresh flowers will be harder to come by: a bouquet of lifelike lifesize blooms of Royal Worcester porcelain. Tiffany has them in stark white with the gloss of blanc de chine, or in fantastically natural colors with a matte finish. You can order a mixed bouquet or an all-of-a-kind bunch of daffodils, narcissus, jasmine, forsythia, pansies, anemones, crocus, poppies, iris, roses, tulips (open and shut), carnations, or pussy willows, plus appropriate single leaves. Arranged in a good-looking bowl or cache-pot, with sphagnum moss stuffed between the stems, a pretty handful of these could become a permanent objet d'art.

Space-age switch on grandmother's "at homes," for busy friends who see each other too rarely, too briefly: The invitation is the same—"Mrs. Smith will be at home," etc. Likewise the timing—three consecutive Friday afternoons at 5:00. Scratched from the program—as you might expect—are hats, white gloves, calling cards. The idea is to drop by on your way home from wherever you are, whip out your needlepoint or embroidery, and relax for an hour over coffee or tea, Bar-le-Duc sandwiches, and pound cake, good talk.

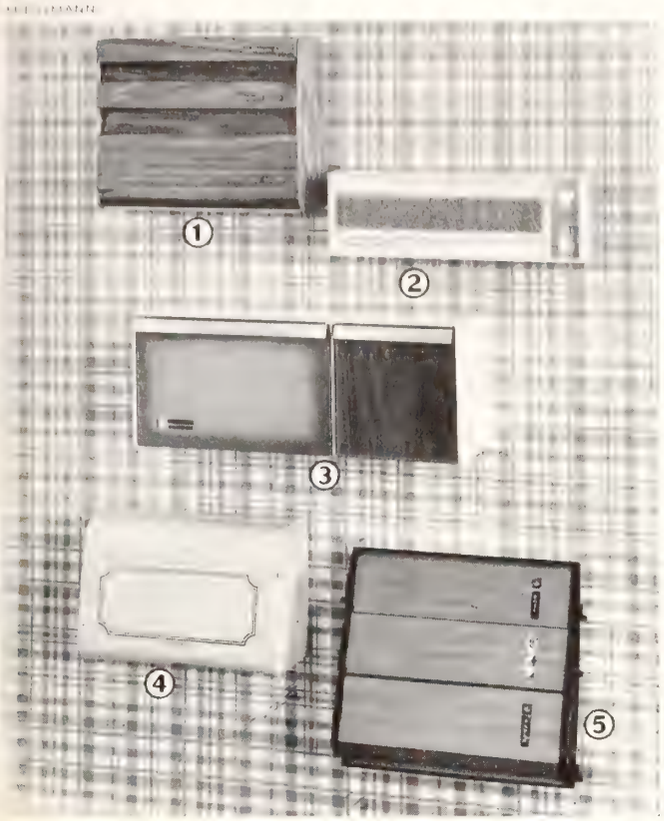
THE $60 DIFFERENCE



The Heritage craftsman guides the dowels into place, extends the curve of the arm to the back and sets t basic design. When a chair, or any piece of furniture, takes its shape from its frame and not just the bulge. ts padding, only more money can buy it.

You might be able to buy a chair that looks like one from this pair for about $260. But you won't be buying the same chair or one that's even close. As time will tell when the springs go their own way, the fabric pulls away from a welt and your chair loses the comfort and the looks you bought in the showroom.
Upholstered in this elegant cut velvet, one of these Heritage swivel base lounge chairs will cost you about $320. Or $60 more than its look-alike.
Cut to form the basic design of this chair alone, the parts of the frame were carved or cut and locked into one solid unit. The springs it supported were tied to the frame and to one another. Then the Heritage upholsterer stretched, shaped and stitched layer on layer of batting over the lines set down by the frame. By the time the fabric was fitted, the contours of the chair were true to the frame, the final repeat of the basic design.
The higher price on this chair, or any other piece of furniture we make, buys something that only more money can buy. Whether it's our concern for the support that holds the lines and ensures the look of a chair. Or the way we'll take the time to bring a wood to its fullest beauty by hand... because no machine or shortcut method can match it.
When you see work like this, you'll find the Heritage name. Stitched on the platform under the cushions of this pair of Heritage chairs. Burned inside the drawers of a mahogany Heritage lowboy. Stitched under the cushions and swinging on a hangtag from a crushed velvet Heritage sofa.
If you would like to know more about Heritage and see how it could fit into your home, send two dollars for a Heritage catalog collection and room planning kit to Dept. HG-9-67, Heritage Furniture Company, High Point, North Carolina.

The notes of a happy housekeeper

BY MARY ELIZABETH FALTER

They tell me that the typical American family moves about once every five years. Well, I guess we're not typical, but finally we are moving, giving up the rambling old farmhouse (not without regrets) and moving to a smaller house in the city.

I've begun to clean out the closets and drawers and I'm dumbfounded by what I've found so far. I cannot, for instance, imagine why we've saved so many old magazines and papers. To clip out things, I suppose, which we never did. Then there is the matter of the eleven trays, four martini pitchers, and five colanders! And we have almost every toy of Tina's since she was born eight years ago -most of them broken. Those that are salvageable are going off to the Children's Hospital, and thank goodness, Tina is taking the disposition of her childhood treasures with a great deal of sangfroid. She's far more decisive and efficient than I am in sorting what stays and what goes.

To me, the unraveling of the fabric of a household is a fine art. Where to begin? The cardinal rule: sentiment is the first thing to do away with! I personally find it better to begin at the top of the house and work down (or vice versa) rather than attack a closet here, a drawer there.

I also find it important to keep the final destination of all the castoffs well in mind and to send them off promptly to whatever agencies can put them to best use. If you don't know exactly what is to become of each item, they have a tendency to pile up all over again.

One of my most useful allies has been the large-sized plastic garbage can I bought just for the extra trash that accumulates so fast when you tackle a job like this. The container is light enough, even when full, for me to move around easily as I work. I made arrangements with our garbage man to make an extra pickup each week until the packing is over.

I want to leave my old house in spanking clean condition for the new owners and I want to give my new place a thorough going over before we move in. So I treated myself to a versatile new dust mop. It is extremely lightweight, and I can maneuver it easily into the corners. Best of all, instead of a raggy mop-end which is a nuisance to clean, the Bissell Disposable Dust Mop uses spun cellulose dusting pads that really last a long time, catch more dirt than ordinary dusters, can be reversed and used over again, and when they have finally had it, can be thrown away and replaced easily. I'm going to use it for buffing all the waxed surfaces in the new house, too.

This seems to be the time, in my family, for moves. My parents have just rented a small apartment, not too far from us, and I wanted to give them some sort of a housewarming gift. But since their problem has been to reduce their possessions, not to add to them, I decided against any decorative frills and got them the most practical thing I could think of—an electric fry pan. These are just great for cooking for two, and the one I got —the Hoover Electric Fry Pan— has a built-in warming tray where you can keep the toast and bacon hot while you fry the eggs. The cooking surface is Teflon-lined so it's easy to clean. And to top off— no pun intended—it has a tilt lid that stays in place as a spatter shield. I'm happy to report Mother and Dad were delighted with it.

Last fall we decided that our twenty-year-old set of metal cookware had seen its best days. So I have been replacing it pan by pan. I decided on the new Perma-Loc Revere Ware because I've always liked the familiar shiny steel sides and copper bottom, but this new variation has a handsome interior of jet black (automatically stain-proof!) extra-durable Teflon.

FIRST IN A SERIES ON THE COOK'S BATTERY OF KNIVES—HOW TO BU AND CARE FOR THEM, HOW EACH IS USED BY AN EXPERIENCED HAND

THE KNIFE FOR THE JOB

THE ANATOMY OF A KNIFE

The need for a sharp-edged knife is as old as hunger and as basic as the instinct for survival. So crucial a role have knives played in history that eras were christened for the materials of these life-supporting tools—the Stone Age, the Bronze Age, the Iron Age, and, finally, the Steel Age. Steel, a combination of iron and carbon, was the most significant of all discoveries for it produced knives that could be sharpened to the finest of edges, invaluable on the battlefield or in the home. As a table tool, the knife supplemented fingers until the introduction of the fork in the seventeenth century. Every diner employed the dagger in his belt to carve his meat and to spear his portions. During the eighteenth century, the golden age of great chefs and gourmets, kitchen protocol called for rows of knives of every shape and size, each designed for a specific job—butcher's knives and tranchelards for cutting and carving, oyster knives, saw-toothed knives. Today, specialization has been perfected to the point where almost every kitchen task can claim its tool, guaranteed to do the job with a minimum of effort and a maximum of efficiency.

While dedicated knife buffs may have an amazing battery of esoteric knives collected from around the world, the cook's cutting-up equipment for ordinary household purposes can be limited to a few essential tools that will take care of the standard jobs of paring, slicing, chopping, mincing, shredding, severing, boning, carving, and cleaving. The well-equipped kitchen should contain: one or more paring knives; a utility knife with a longer blade for jobs a paring knife can't tackle, such as slicing through large fruits and vegetables; a small knife with a serrated or scalloped edge for cutting easily through the tough peel of citrus fruit or the soft skin of a tomato; a French chef's knife with a heavy triangular blade for chopping; a serrated or scalloped-edge bread knife; a long, thin flexible ham slicer; a butcher's knife with a heavy blade for cutting up poultry and raw meats; a boning knife for separating meat from carcass; a carving knife with a blade sufficiently long to slice most cooked meats and, above all, a good-quality, fine-grained sharpening steel.

What makes a good knife

Regardless of its purpose, only a good knife will perform well day in and day out. Cut-rate cutlery is no bargain and price should be no consideration, for a few top-quality knives, properly cared for, will still be going strong years after batch upon batch of inferior cutlery has been discarded. A good knife can easily last ten or more years, depending on the thickness of the blade and the number of times it is sharpened, for sharpening tends to reduce the thinly ground cutting area of the blade.

The first requirement of good kitchen cutlery is that it can take and retain a fine cutting edge. Although steel may be made up of different alloys such as vanadium and chromium, steel plus carbon is the basic metal of all knives and the higher the carbon content, the better the steel. For this reason, many chefs insist on carbon steel knives, maintaining that no stainless-steel knife can be sharpened to as fine an edge. However, today, thanks to metallurgical advances, stainless-steel knives with a high carbon content are being made in Europe and America that have the edge-retaining properties of the softer carbon steel and the added advantages of wearing down less quickly and not discoloring. High carbon stainless is more expensive than the old types of stainless steel, but infinitely more serviceable.

Material is not the only factor that determines the quality and performance of a knife. The fineness of the grain of the steel, and the heat-treating and tempering processes used in its manufacture are also of vital importance. Whether die-cut or forged, the knife blade is heated at a very high temperature in an electrically controlled furnace, then rapidly cooled in a liquid bath. At this stage it is hard, but very brittle. The blade is then "tempered" by being slowly reheated in a bath of very hot liquid, and the longer the tempering, the more flexible the blade becomes. The tempered blade is then ground, according to the type of edge that is required.

There are two main types of grind found on kitchen cutlery—the taper or V grind, in which the blade is sharpened on both sides to a tapering edge, and the hollow grind where the lower part of the blade is sharpened in a concave curve, ending in a thin edge, like a straight razor. For a serrated or saw-toothed edge, the steel is cut into tiny teeth, and for a scalloped edge the blade is hollow ground and cut into narrow scallops. Serrated edges, which tear rather than cut, are mostly used for slicing bread, but the scalloped edge is becoming increasingly popular, as it slices smoothly and evenly and the cutting edge behind the point of the scallops does not wear down as quickly as a straight edge. This knife is not recommended for chopping; only a straight-edged blade will do for that.

Another requisite of a good knife is the tang—the metal part of the blade that extends into the handle, either all the way down or part-way (the degrees of length are described as full, three-quarter, or half tang), and is riveted to it in two or three places. This balances the knife and keeps the handle from working loose. In inexpensive cutlery, the handle is seldom riveted and will, in time, separate from the tang. Tang and blade should fit together tightly, with no gaps or fissures to collect bacteria, and the handle, rivets, butt of the handle, and knife shoulder (the steel part immediately above the handle) should be smoothly polished. These evidences of workmanship may not affect the performance of a knife, but they indicate that it has been painstakingly assembled.

How to buy a knife

Before buying a knife in a store, you should check on all these points. Also hold the knife with the back at eye level, point away from you, to see if the blade is straight and true. Then test the balance to determine if it feels comfortable in your hand. According to the job the knife is intended for, it will need more weight in the handle or the blade so that your hand does not become tired as you use it. A boning knife needs more weight in the handle, for you are doing the cutting. In a chef's knife, which is mostly used point down, with the blade moving up and down like a chopper, the weight should be in the blade. As everyone's hand is different in size and grasp, the knife should feel right, almost like an extension of your arm.

When you are buying knives, avoid the problematical, often anonymous bargains in dime stores and discount houses. Housewares departments, good hardware stores, and shops specializing in kitchen equipment are your best sources, and the name of a reputable manufacturer your guarantee. If you don't have any local sources, there are restaurant and hotel suppliers and specialty shops in large cities that will send catalogues and sell by mail.

Keeping a knife in condition

A good knife should never be abused. Under that heading come such common but reprehensible practices as cutting string or paper, prying off the tops of bottles and jars, opening cans, and cutting against hard surfaces. Always use a wood board for chopping and, if possible, carving. Care should be your watchword in cleaning—after using a knife, wipe it with a damp cloth or soapy sponge, dry, and put away. Never let it soak in the sink or be buffeted in the dishwasher, for the edge will be blunted by banging against hard objects and the immersion will weaken the bond between tang and blade. If the handle is wood, rather than ebonite or one of the laminated wood veneers, water will dry it out. Chefs make a habit of rubbing a little oil into wood handles, as a gunstock is treated, to repel moisture, darken the patina, and prevent cracking. Carbon steel blades, unlike stainless (a word manufacturers insist should be taken literally—it stains less, but it will discolor a little) become darkened and marked with use, honorable blemishes to a professional. But regular cleaning of the blade with household cleanser or salt and steel wool will keep it fairly free of stains. Fruits, especially citrus fruits, have a corrosive action on steel. Cut these, whenever possible, with a stainless steel scalloped-edge knife, and clean off the blade immediately.

Storage is the next most important factor in the care and upkeep of knives. As history can attest, when a knife was regarded as a life-and-death tool, its fine edge was jealously maintained by sheathing it in a scabbard. Eighteenth-century chefs adopted the practice of wearing a wooden case of knives at their belts. The modern counterpart is the slotted storage rack or magnetic knife rack (the latter should be heavy duty, or the weight of the knives will pull them off). Failing this, store your knives in a partitioned drawer or in individual cardboard sheaths to stop them jostling each other and being blunted.

Keeping the fine edge

However well you treat a knife, time and use will dull the edge, and a dull knife is an unsafe knife. You have to expend greater force and there is more likelihood of it slipping and cutting you. To test for sharpness, draw the edge lightly across a tomato. The weight alone

GOING PLACES, FINDING THINGS ON

THE ITALIAN RIVIERA

BY MARY ROCHE

It was the English who discovered the Italian Riviera. The Italians admit it. Before the English began to flock there for the winter sun towards the end of the last century, the crescent of coast curling around from the French border to the Gulf of La Spezia was simply Liguria, Italy's smallest province. Apart from the great port of Genoa, it didn't amount to much—a string of fishing villages and dilapidated fortresses, a few traditional centers of ceramics, weaving, lace-making. For the Romans, of course, Liguria was a corridor to the West, and they built what is still its main road—the Aurelian Way. Julius Caesar is said to have taken a breather at the west Riviera town of Ventimiglia on his way home after conquering Gaul. "Oh yes," adds your Italian friend with a mischievous gleam in his eye, "and it was a Ventimiglian who civilized the English—Gneo Giulio Agricola, first Roman governor of Britain."

Today the English are as scarce on the Riviera as Romans in England. Most of the big comfortable villas they built overlooking the sea are owned by Italians now, or have been converted to pensioni. But an English accent still echoes in the Via Inglese that you find in almost every Riviera town, and in the ubiquitous signs advertising "afternoon tea" along with gelati and aperitivi. The mood is a happy blend of the most attractive aspects of each people—the more relaxed, chintz-and-flower-garden side of the English and the crisp, friendly, energetic side of the Ligurians. In this part of Italy you forget the endors of the Renaissance and the Vatican (although the Romans m to have passed through only yesterday). Here life is dominated flowers and the sea.

I visited Liguria in May, driving around the Riviera di Ponente, western or sunset shore of the gulf, to the Riviera di Levante or rise shore, east of Genoa. On my first day in San Remo I was taken see "La Mortola" or Villa Hanbury, which is in a way a monument h to the English invasion and to the serious cultivation of plants it has caused this coast also to be called the Riviera dei Fiori.

Located about 15 miles west of San Remo, between Ventimiglia d the French border, La Mortola is a magnificent multi-acre garden, ping steeply from the corniche to the sea, where you will find over 000 different species of plants from every continent, every latitude. though it is in fact a botanical garden, it has none of the impersonal nts-for-plants-sake air of so many scientific horticultural projects. s you wander about the winding paths and down the old stone steps, u feel you are in a private garden designed for intimate personal joyment, which in fact La Mortola was. (Continued on page 61)

Exactly 100 years ago, Sir omas Hanbury, a thirty-five-ar-old Englishman just back om China, where he had made a tune, bought the property with seventeenth-century villa from e of the leading families of Ven-niglia. His ambition was to cre-e an "Eden" of exotic plants on is Mediterranean hillside where was convinced anything would ow, and he spent the rest of his e and a large part of his fortune oving that indeed it would. His n and daughter-in-law added rgolas, avenues of cypress, a arming gazebo with a lacy dome open ironwork, ornamental ulpture. But after repairing the amage of World War II, Lady orothy Hanbury was no longer ble to maintain the garden, so in 960 she sold the property to the overnment.

Professor Onorato Masera, ie director, took us about, point-ig out here a rare plant from frica, there a rare species from sia. But the exotics are freely nixed—and were from the begin-ing—with indigenous flora. You re constantly running across de-ightful surprises: Arizona cacti growing beside Italian olives and ypresses; a slope blazing with lowering quince sharply framed by a severely clipped hedge of box; biblical bulrushes growing in a pool fed by a shell-shaped foun-tain, and, in the background, half hidden by the foliage, a small nude sculpture. And about halfway down to the sea, you suddenly come upon a remnant of the Au-relian Way, its ancient stone walls blanketed with vines. For this is one of many spots along the coast where Napoleon's engineers re-routed the road to a higher level.

On the way back to San Re-mo, we stopped at Bordighera to take a look at the new Grand Ho-tel del Mare, which must be the first large hotel built on the Rivi-era in thirty years. Certainly it is the most modern. You drive in through a tunnel to a rotunda, open at the center to the sky, where you park your car, then take an elevator to the lobby floor. At one side of the lobby, glass doors slide open to a charming in-door water garden with running streams, stepping stones, and aquatic plants. From another part of the lobby you can step outdoors to a giardino pensile or "hanging garden." I had always supposed a hanging garden was a terraced garden built on a steep slope. But the giardino pensile popular around the Gulf of Genoa is more like a roof garden—lawns, flowers, even trees planted in soil that has been hauled up to the top of some man-made structure, often the roof of a one-story wing. The hotel gar-den had been laid out on top of the tunnel and parking rotunda.

In the swimming pool nearby was a mystifying series of giant mushroom shapes—concrete sau-cers supported by steel posts, grad-uating in scale from the size of a bar stool to a platform several feet high. The latter, it turned out, was the diving board; the others were steps leading up to it—a charming playful design, I thought, that would be great for a home pool.

Not unexpectedly, flowers are the decorative motif of the dining room in San Remo's Hotel Royale where I stayed—but they are ex-traordinary flowers used in an ex-

Rocce di Pina Marc, and when I tasted the risotto con molluschi (rice with mussels) and the arancia caramelita (oranges topped with caramelized rind and a caramel sauce), I blessed the hunch that took me there.

It was just before I reached Savona that I noticed for the first time a phenomenon that continued to fascinate me throughout the Riviera: painted-on architecture. Passing a stuccoed building, I suddenly realized that those classic window frames with the peaked pediments and projecting sills and those coins of rusticated stonework did not in fact exist. They were merely trompe-l'oeil exterior decoration. From then on it became a game to see how much of a building was real and how much fake. One day I saw not merely painted window frames but painted windows complete with painted blinds.

It seems a pity that so many American travelers skip Genoa. Admittedly, it is a city that does not put its best foot forward. To see its beauties you have to know where to look. And there is no guidebook. The tourist organization for Genoa Province, however, puts out a series of helpful pamphlets—one each on the city's art museums and galleries; fortifications; churches; palaces. Since I had only a day to spend there, I elected to concentrate on the palaces and villas and from the rather overwhelming list, picked five.

The palaces of Genoa are a unique form of architecture. The great Flemish painter Peter Paul Rubens was so impressed with them when he was studying in Italy at the beginning of the seventeenth century that he made a set of measured drawings of their facades, later published as a book. What makes them extraordinary is magnificence of scale coupled with an extremely practical solution to the problem of how to create spaciousness on steeply sloping lots. For Genoa, squeezed in between mountains and sea, never had any place to expand but up.

Most of these great houses have the same general plan. From the street, you enter a large and lofty entrance hall. A handsome stairway ascends from there to what at first appears to be a broad balcony, but is in fact a kind of loggia, completely open across the back to a garden courtyard. At each end of the loggia are doors leading to the rooms on the piano nobile or main floor (we would call it the second). The rooms at the back have floor-length windows opening to the courtyard which is at second-story level because of the slope of the site. Often a room at the front of the house opens to a giardino pensile laid out on the aordinary way. Almost everying in the room is white—walls, oodwork, furniture, table linens. he only decoration is overhead: ghting fixtures shielded by latceworks of Venetian glass flowers cented here and there with glass utterflies. And from the molding iat edges the tray ceiling, lifeze glass flowers stand up as traight and perky as if they were rowing in a garden border. (I ater learned that decorating the eiling, rather than the walls, was Ligurian tradition—a wonderful vay of leading the eye, and the pirits, upwards.)

Early one morning seemed a good time to investigate La Città Vecchia, the old medieval township of La Pigna on the heights, which was the nucleus of modern San Remo. Since it is totally inaccessible by car, I started to walk up what I thought was the right street. After some minutes I could see that it was not, so I asked directions of a young girl who had come along beside me. She started to explain, then stopped short, saying "Le faccio vedere (I will show you)"—and proceeded to lead me down the steep five or six blocks she had just climbed up and would have to climb back again, leaving me at one of the gates of the old city at the foot of the long brick-paved steps that make up its "streets."

By now it was 8:30, and as I trudged laboriously upward, a steady stream of people came flying downwards—school children in their absurd white smocks and flowing black ties, bouncing down the steps as lightly as badminton birds; young men with attaché cases, scooting out of ancient arched doorways and tripping down the steps as if they were on the escalator in the Pan Am Building. They'll all be climbing back tonight I thought—but that didn't make the ascent any easier. When I saw the way ahead curving into a steep, dark, narrow covered alley, I chickened out. Some day I shall go back and persevere until I reach the antique shops up on the Via Capitolo. That day I had to drive to Genoa. So I walked back to the hotel, packed the car, and set out on the Aurelian Way.

I stopped for lunch near Marina di Andora where I spied an ample landscaped parking area on my side of the road just in time to drive in. A sign pointing to il ristorante led through a gate in the hedge, down steps, through a pretty sloping garden, down more steps, and finally to a windswept glass-walled building overlooking the sea. The name of the place was

How are you spending tonight?

There's not much choice—or fun—if everything's the same.

It's because you do have free choice that you have so many good things to choose from. Tonight's movie. Tomorrow's groceries. Next year's car. And it's all the competition that makes these things get better all the time.

Of course, some people think you have too much choice in the marketplace.

They think you are confused or, maybe, just not bright enough to make up your own mind about the products you want and need. They think the government ought to help you.

For instance, wouldn't it be simpler if there were only four brands of toothpaste instead of 68? And who needs all those flavors? Most people like peppermint so why shouldn't they all be peppermint? Don't laugh. There really are people—well-mea ing people—who think the governme ought to regulate the number of brands the market and standardize their conten In other words, they want to do your sho ping for you. That's nice of them. But, h anyone asked you about it?

Maybe you don't like peppermint.

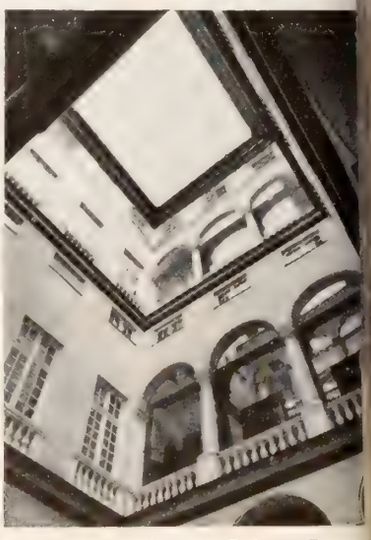
roof of the offices and workrooms adjoining the ground-floor entrance hall. Here the logic of the "hanging garden" is very clear: an oasis of greenery in the midst of the closely built-up city, it has automatic privacy from the street, yet does not consume valuable street-level space.

Grand as these palaces are, I found them exhilarating rather than intimidating, perhaps because the people who built them—the affluent shipowners and naval officers of the Genoese Republic—seem more comprehensible than the princes and popes and politicians of Renaissance Florence and Rome. And there seems to be more continuity between Genoa's past and its life today.



The Genoese have long been art collectors. They were fond of the Flemish painters as well as their own local artists; their great favorite was Van Dyck. Every important family had (or still has) its own private collection, some of which have been given to the city, along with the palaces they adorned, and form the basis of its most important museums.

I started with the Palazzo Spinola (accent on first syllable), one of several of the same name. This one, on the Piazza di Pellicceria, number 1, is exceptional for the fact that it was lived in until about ten years ago, and still contains most of its furniture. Turning off Via Garibaldi at Via San Siro, I saw signs leading to the palace, but soon lost them, so I accosted a little man in a peaked cap who looked like some kind of messenger. His first response was to dive into the nearest "bar." Seconds lated he dived out again saying "Le faccio vedere" (that phrase rang in my ears for days after I had left the Riviera), and I raced after him as he scoot down one cobblestoned alley af another. Finally he stopped lo enough to say "ecco," then he sc ried off.

The entrance of the pal was so unprepossessing that I w not at all sure I was in the ri place, but that, I later learn was typical of many palaces in t older section of the city. Once y are inside, the grubbiness quick switches to splendor. My favor room in this house was the d ing room where the table was with a magnificent service bronze doré—compotes, épergn and candelabra—totaling elev pieces. There was also a collecti of fine ceramics from Savona, t city I had passed through on m way up from San Remo. And a over the house there were pair ings, including some by Van Dyc Guido Reni, Angelica Kauffma

From the Palazzo Spinola found my way back to Via Ga baldi, which, along with Via Ball has the most and the handsome palaces in Genoa. Two of them, t Palazzo Bianco and the Palaz Rosso, are the city's most impo tant art museums. Both were heavily damaged during World War II and both have been beautifully restored, but to very different effect. The oldest, the Palazzo Bianco, or white palace, was built along classic lines in the golden age of the mid-sixteenth century when Via Garibaldi was known as "the new street." But when the building was restored in 1950, its interiors were intentionally re-designed to serve as a museum rather than a re-creation of a private residence. Stark white walls, simple ceiling-to-floor Venetian blinds at the huge vaulted windows, and wall-to-wall fluorescent lights make an austere modern setting, but they focus attention on the art, and on the basic architecture as well.

On the other hand, in restoring the Palazzo Rosso, or red palace, across the street (its name comes from its sandstone façade), the city made a point of preserving the residential palace atmosphere. Although one of the more modern buildings on Via Garibaldi—it was built in the late seventeenth century—it still follows the classic plan, but because it is on the south or down side of the street, its courtyard garden is at street level. Among its treasures are a collection of Hellenistic sculpture, Gobelin tapestries, eighteenth-century furniture, carved wood manger figures, and a collection of ceramics from Savona and nearby Albissola ranging from the seventeenth century to the present.

In summer, the rich Genoese families used to retreat to country villas on the heights looking out over the city to the sea. Although scarcely less grand than the palaces, these villas seem more relaxed because of their gardens, porticoes, and loggias. Here, you can tell, life was more informal, less confined. You can easily imagine children running about. But the houses are no longer, of course, in the country. A ten-minute taxi ride took me to Villa Cambiaso, which is considered a masterpiece of the great sixteenth-century architect Galeazzo Alessi, credited with having changed the face of Genoa. To appreciate this villa properly, however, you have to wear some kind of magically tinted glasses that will screen out everything but the nobility of the architecture. For me, the beauty of the great house was spoiled by its present sterile atmosphere as the headquarters of the University of Genoa's engineering school. Students dashing across the neglected loggia to their classes in rooms bare of everything except equation-filled blackboards and institutional chairs killed every lingering trace of charm.

I was happier about the Villa Imperiale, which now houses the Lercari Library. The taxi had to leave me at the gate on the Piazza Terralba since there is no drive into the pretty, well-tended park where old people were sitting taking the sun and young mothers watched their children playing. At the back of the park, a steep ascent, part ramp, part garden steps, takes you to the upper level where the villa majestically dominates the whole site. The man at the desk inside the door asked if I wanted to borrow a book. When I explained that I would like to see the villa, he called the head librarian who seemed very pleased and delegated his assistant to show me around. As we walked through the lofty light-filled main hall with its Cambiaso frescoes, I felt that somehow the people at the reading tables, like those in the garden below, were enjoying the old villa as it was meant to be enjoyed.

Having re-lived the past in Genoa, I drove down the Riviera di Levante to the little peninsula that includes Rapallo, Santa Margherita Ligure, and Portofino, where I was treated to a survey of the way people live on the Riviera oday, I had been given an introduction to an exceptionally knowledgeable woman in Rapallo who took me on a lightning tour. Appropriately, we started with a sixteenth-century villa where a retired English colonel, and his wife's family before him, had wintered for upwards of sixty years. The house itself is in the classic Italian style, but the minute you walk into the living room with its comfortable disorder and yards and yards of flowered chintz, you have no doubt about the nationality of the family who lives there.

We visited another villa created by joining three case coloniche—the old stone houses of tenant farmers. To remodel a casa colonica is as fashionable in Italy today as remodeling saltboxes used to be in New England. We visited a modern villa owned by an Italian fashion designer and his young wife, who had set up in their basement an imaginative party-room-cave. It had one whole wall of wine racks, an old hand-crank player piano, and a ceiling hung with assorted and amusing irrelevancies—old flatirons, horse irons, strings of onions. We visited a very modern, very lush duplex apartment with a spectacular sea view—and a brand new seaside house that boasted such refinements as sliding glass doors, electric awnings, central air conditioning, and a special cupboard designed to store the accouterments of the family yacht.

As we went along I was puzzled by the frequent references to "lo stile Liberty." Overlooking the fact that "Liberty" was an English word, I cast about for some chronological connection with Italian history—time of Garibaldi, maybe? Finally came the explanation: what the Italians call the "Liberty style" is what we call "Art Nouveau" or "Tiffany." They labeled it "Liberty" because it was especially promoted by Liberty of London. And it is as popular in Italy now as it is in the U.S.

The Liberty period, if not precisely the Liberty style, was represented by my favorite of all the villas we visited. The Villa Andreae was built in 1898 by the German Consul to Rapallo, who, like so many of his English neighbors, had decided that this delightful coast was the place to retire. Architecturally, the house is in the Italian villa tradition, but its decoration, exterior and interior, is unique. It is a tall house, a full four stories plus attic, standing on a high knoll. But way up there circling the eaves is a 5-foot-deep fresco in the manner of Maxfield Parrish—little naked boys hauling fish nets, working pillow lace, and engaged in other activities characteristic of the Riviera. The rest of the exterior is embellished with painted motifs, not fake architecture, but frankly decorative columns, urns, scrolls, and arabesques. And inside the house every room has a differently painted ceiling. On the lofty main floor, they tend toward the classic, but as you go upstairs, they become more informal. In a small bedroom on the top floor, the ceiling is blithely decorated with trompe-l'oeil sprays of dogwood. Consul Andreae's son, now living in the villa with his family, is an ardent horticulturist and hopes someday to make his gardens a kind of miniature Villa Hanbury.

One morning, from my hotel in Santa Margherita, I drove along the coast to Portofino, the little fishing village at the tip of the peninsula which has in recent years become tremendously chic. What has saved it from being totally overrun, they say, is that it has nowhere to grow and the only highway approach is so narrow and winding that it automatically puts a ceiling on traffic. In any case, the balmy air, the sparkling

Second in a series prepared by H&G in cooperation with the Oriental Rug Importers Association

H&G's primer on Oriental rugs today

THE NOMAD RUGS OF PERSIA

To many people an Oriental rug means a Persian rug. This notion is quite erroneous (see May H&G), but it is true that at least 50 per cent of the Orientals imported to the U. S. today come from Persia that is, Iran.

There are two traditions of rug weaving in Persia—the great tradition of the cities, and the ancient tradition of the nomad tribes. Somewhere in between these two styles are village rugs, which may be woven in one tradition or the other, according to location and custom.

When you visit an Oriental rug dealer, you will probably find it easy to spot the city rugs—fine rugs of sophisticated design and color. They will even bear the names of well-known Persian cities: Kerman, Kashan, Sarouk, Tabriz, Ispahan, Kazvin, Hamadan, Heriz. If you are looking for a room-size or a fairly large area rug, you will surely be shown some of these. But if you are shopping for a small area size, you are quite likely to be shown a selection of nomad rugs.

Among them will be brilliantly colored Afshari tribal designs; some examples, perhaps, of Kashkai and Khamseh rugs from Persia's southern mountain regions; and colorful Bakhtiari designs, as well as more somber Baluchis with bold geometric motifs worked in the wool's natural blacks, grays, and camels and accented with white, reds, or splashes of other primary colors. There may also be some Tekkeh and Yomut designs from the Iranian-Turkoman border in the northeast, and here and there a Kurdish rug from the northwest mountains.

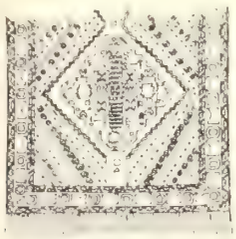
We tend to think of Persia as a land of fabulous bazaars and gardens, fine buildings and mosques, and bustling modern cities such as Tehran. But outside the cities and quite removed from the newly developed oil wealth, is the ancient sheep-raising economy in which wool is the "money crop."

If you study the map of Iran, you will see two mountain ranges running generally northwest to southeast on both sides of the country. These are joined at the north by another range which curves around the southern end of the Caspian Sea. Much of central Iran is high arid plateau country between the mountains. Most of the storied cities are in this central section, located naturally along the old caravan routes, but joined today by modern roads.

In winter, the rolling foothills and the high plateaus turn green with grass, excellent for grazing flocks. But when the intense summer sun dries the grass, the sheep-raising nomad tribes strike their black tents and move into the cooler mountains that rise from 6,000 to more than 9,000 feet above sea level, with even higher peaks and ridges. There on the rough slopes and in the sheltered valleys, the nomad shepherds find pasture moving from one spot to another as the grass is exhausted. This process continues until the winter rainy season brings new grass and the tribes back to the lower plateaus.

Not all sheep-raising tribes are rug weavers; some merely sell their carpet wool to the weavers of the cities. Nomads with a rug-weaving tradition, however, have an edge on the others, for wool woven into rugs brings a much higher price in the bazaar than wool sold wholesale by the pound. So each family tries to convert as much of its surplus wool into rugs as it can.

In nearly all nomad tribes, women do most of the weaving (the men are the shepherds) so a man with many daughters is considered lucky. Far from having to furnish dowries, he can demand payment from would-be bridegrooms. With today's rising rug prices, many young men find it hard to meet the going rate on wives, particularly if the girls are nimble carpet weavers.



The rug-weaving tribes are found, for the most part, in six different sections of Iran—some in the northeast and northwest mountains; others in regions to the south and other mountainous areas. The typical designs of each section have easily distinguishable characteristics, which even neophytes can soon learn to recognize. Each tribe has its own traditional designs which are committed to memory and handed down from mother to daughter. Naturally these vary from weaver to weaver. And colors may change from rug to rug with each lot of wool dyed. In fact, no two rugs are exactly like, which is part of their appeal.

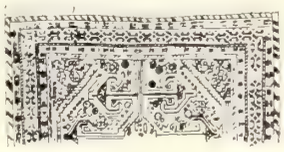
Although rugs woven in the Persian cities may vary in size from a few square feet to 20 feet or more in width and 40 or more in length, tribal rugs are almost never more than 4 to 5 feet in width by 6 to 8 feet in length—sometimes, even smaller. This is because the looms on which they are woven must be small enough to be dismantled and loaded on the backs of donkeys or camels when the tribe moves from place to place.

Nomad looms are light, horizontal affairs, set flat a few inches from the ground. The weavers crouch in front of them to tie the knots, rolling the finished portion forward as they work. Historians believe such looms are only a few steps removed from the earliest known types whose origins go back into pre-history.

The nomad rugs you are most likely to find today at Oriental rug dealers include six general types:

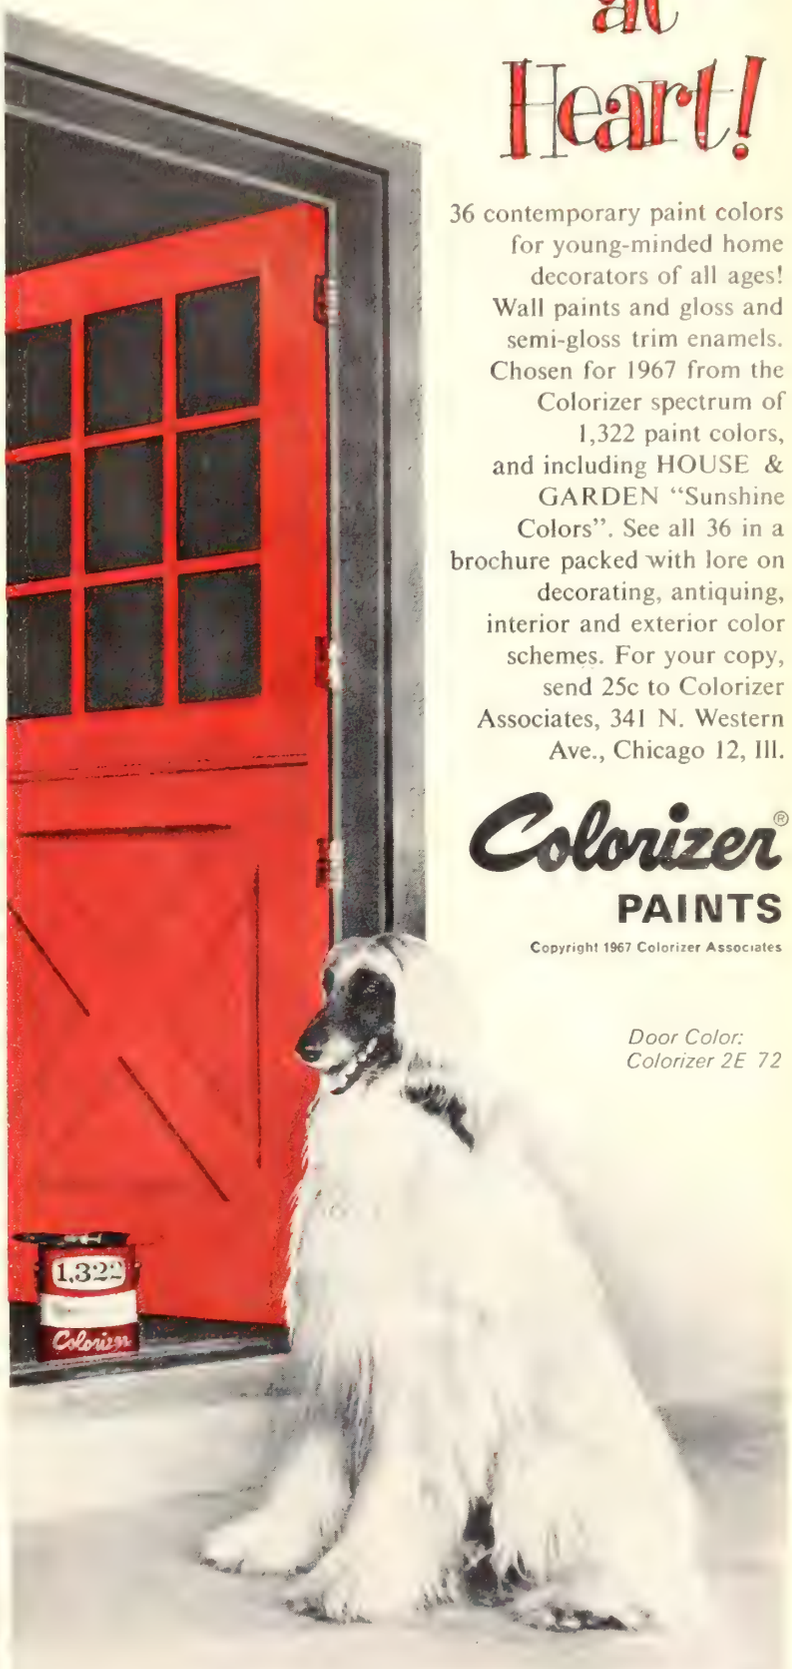


1. AFSHARS. A comparatively large number of these rugs made by the Afshari tribes living in the mountains slightly southwest of the city of Kerman find their way to the U. S. market. The production of any one type of nomad rug depends upon the size of the tribe, but the Afshari are fairly numerous and they are diligent weavers. Of Turkish origin, these people were forceably moved by the shah (an accepted method for dealing with revolt or unrest) in the late sixteenth century from the north around Azerbaijan to the province of Kerman. They still speak a Turkish dialect and use the Turkish knot in weaving (see May H&G), as do many nomad tribes (interesting to know, but of little practical value, as you will never be able to tell one knot from another just by looking at the rug). On the other hand, some Afshars woven by Persian women who have married into the tribe are made with the Persian knot.

In the earlier days the Afshari used nothing but wool for warps and wefts, and sometimes you will still find an all-wool Afshar with wool fringe. But today most Afshari buy in the bazaar cotton warp and weft yarns which make a more stable fabric, less likely to pull out of shape than the all-wool.

The Afshari rug is small usually 4 by 6 feet or 4½ by 6½, and very colorful. The typical designs are geometric and rectilinear, worked out in small sections somewhat like needlepoint, never in the smooth flowing lines of the city rugs. The borders are fairly wide and elaborately decorated. The center field may be a single or double diamond shape or a six-sided medallion. These, and the corners of the field, are usually decorated with smaller motifs, and sometimes even smaller symbols may be worked in rows over the inner field.

Other typical Afshari designs have no center medallions, but the fields within the borders are covered by rows of stylized motifs, such as the pine cone or pear, commonly known as the Paisley motif. Another favorite motif is called the "Hen Design" and sure enough, once somebody points it out, you can't miss the likeness. In all designs, there is endless color variation, sometimes bold and brilliant, sometimes toned down with soft brick tones that replace the usual reds. Combined with the reds are golds, browns, beiges, and darkest blue, and often small flecks of green. All Afshars are colorful and they make excellent accent rugs for country rooms or informal rooms of any type.



2. KASHKAI AND KHAMSEH. On the western slopes of the Zagros Mountains, across the range from the Afsharis who occupy the eastern slopes, is another tribe of rug-making nomads known as the Fars. The city of Shiraz is the capital of Fars province, and just as the Afshar rugs are brought to market in the city of Kerman, the Fars rugs are sold in Shiraz.

In this region are two different tribal confederations—the Kashkai and the Khamsehs. The Kashkais are of Turkish origin. Apparently they were driven south long ago by the Mongol invasions, but they still speak a Turkish dialect and weave with the Turkish knot. Their rugs have clear, gay colors, and great care and pride is taken in the washing, spinning,

HERE ARE 70 COATS OF ARMS LISTED HERE...

THERE ARE OVER 500,000 MORE COATS OF ARMS IN THE ARCHIVES OF SANSON INSTITUTE

AD HOW THE SANSON INSTITUTE HAS PRESERVED E RECORDS FROM OVER 20 EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

1860, Mr. William Hubert Seddon of Sheffield, England began a library of coats ns. This collection of books, written in the mediaeval language of the "Heralds", rought to the United States and from this collection the archives of the Sanson ute of Heraldry in Boston was begun. Representatives of the Sanson Institute onstantly searching for still older sources and additional reference volumes in to revive interest in the art of heraldry and its meanings. A trip to Holland, a e find in Brittany, a visit to a small village library in southern Italy . . . all have buted to the compilation of what is recognized as one of the most complete dic libraries in existence. The Sanson Institute research staff has been trained to late carefully and correctly the mediaeval heraldic language and to interpret ntically the meanings and descriptions of these Coats of Arms. Modern techno- l advances were called upon to execute the monumental task of attaining the ability to research, draw, and catalogue over 500,000 names and Coats of Arms, as well as their interpretations and reference sources. Many of our reference books are centuries old (some dating back as far as the 1600's). The Sanson Institute, through its knowledge of heraldic practices can determine by accepted formulae a coat of arms applicable to a surname exactly the same as yours or an older form of that surname from which your present name may have emerged. Utilizing their highly skilled and specialized personnel to give meaning to the knowledge which has come down from the Middle Ages, the Sanson Institute can now offer you a most decorative and colorful coat of arms which was earlier granted to a distinguished person whose surname was the same as, or an earlier form of, your family name . . . a replica of an antique that will be a welcome addition and conversation piece in every home.

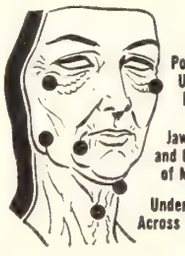
Chemist Experiments with Honey and Egg . . . Discovers How To

TIGHTEN SAGGING SKIN ON FACE AND THROAT

A laboratory experiment with natural bee's honey and extract of egg may prove to be the best news for sagging, drooping skin that makes face and throat look old and dowdy.



This new honey and egg skin-tightening recipe has been blended into a delightful new cream formula for easy home use. A thin coating spread over face and neck almost immediately makes the skin feel wonderfully stimulated as the tightening process begins. The skin undergoes a delightful, cooling temperature change . . . feels ever tighter as the process continues. The honey and egg dries to a glazed finish as nature's own ingredients continue to perform their skin-tightening magic.

And it's so fantastically easy! Just spread over skin with the fingertips, leave on for 15 minute tightening process, then . . . easiest of all . . . cool, clear water removes every trace in seconds! Skin looks and feels smoother, tighter more alluring. Your face and neck may look younger, firmer, more vibrant and glowing than they have for years! Makeup looks more natural and stays looking fresh and lovely hours longer.

Tests proved conclusively that using nature's own Honey and Egg for new skin beauty, produced these long-lasting beneficial effects on all textures and types of skin: (1) gave the skin a tingling, refreshing coolness "just like a beauty shop facial"; (2) tightened sagging, drooping skin, left it feeling taut and firm; (3) weathered aging skin felt ultrasmooth again.

Not yet in drug or department stores, order by mail. Long-lasting supply costs only $3.00 on guarantee of satisfaction or money back. Try it today and see if it isn't the best way ever to make old, sagging facial and throat skin look and feel smooth again!

THIS IS NO ORDINARY, RUN-OF THE-MEAL COOK BOOK

House & Garden's Cook Book

To prove it, we'll send you a copy of House & Garden's New Cook Book FOR FREE EXAMINATION!

Here is the cook book to end all cook books...and all routine dining for you, your family and your guests. Here is a creative approach that treats cooking as an art, not a chore.

OVER 1,000 RECIPES—BY THE WORLD'S TOP EXPERTS

The recipes are unique, original, and they work—with a minimum of fuss and bother. All have been selected by the editors of House & Garden or a famous guest contributor like James A. Beard, Dione Lucas, Julia Child, Elaine Ross, Nika Standon Hazelton, Craig Claiborne and others.

These famous chefs provide you with a wide range of recipes—for a wide range of occasions. Recipes are completely indexed—under hors d'oeuvre, soup, egg and cheese dishes, fish, meat, poultry, game, sauces, pasta and rice, vegetables, salads, desserts, cake, cookies and breads. You can find everything you are looking for quickly and easily.

A COMPLETE GUIDE TO MEAL PREPARATION

House & Garden's New Cook Book merely starts with recipes. It also contains what is virtually a course in preparing and cooking food. Techniques of the master chefs are explained—and simplified in picture performances. You will see exactly how these experts make thin cake layers for a torte, pipe cream puffs, lard a roast of meat, bone a trout, stuff vine leaves, flute a mushroom. When it comes to doing it yourself, it's a snap.

There are more detailed drawings and diagrams to illustrate cooking techniques in House & Garden's New Cook Book than you will find in any other gourmet cook book ever published.

There is also material covering the wine to select for a dish...evaluation of cooking equipment and utensils ...tips on baking, poaching, barbecuing and other forms of cooking...plus ideas for atmosphere, table settings and decorative surprises that will enliven every meal and party.

Good cook? This book can make your reputation as a great chef!

When House & Garden's New Cook Book arrives, try a few of these exciting recipes:

■ Beef Wellington, Perigeuex Sauce ■ Lobster Strudel with Béarnaise Sauce ■ Rolled Chicken Pâté ■ Miniature Shrimp Quiche ■ Oysters Rockefeller à la Franey ■ Baked Lobster Fire Island Style ■ Roast Turkey Woburn Abbey ■ Breadfruit Vichyssoise ■ Crêpes Directoire ■ Soufflé Orientale

This book can also make your reputation as a successful hostess!

Try, too:

■ A Mexican taco party ■ A plain turkey—dressed and decorated like a work of fine art ■ An edible centerpiece for your next cocktail party ■ A dessert course of melon fashioned into flowers ■ A delightful take-home surprise for guests: dinner napkins with the main course recipe on them

DISCOVER THE SECRET OF YOUTH

Read this amazing report about a fabulous cream that helps keep skin looking 20 years younger.

Reports just compiled, reveal that a special face cream can help keep skin fresh, soft, clear and younger-looking for women of all ages. One writes—"I haven't a wrinkle. It's a wonderful powder base and is not greasy. Sempray Jovenay protects my face . . . " Other letters report—"I have never known the meaning of a blackhead." "Not a wrinkle on face or neck." "It has no equal for cleansing the skin and retaining a lovely complexion." Those tiny, dry-skin wrinkles simply seem to fade away with Sempray Jovenay (always young.)

Now, it stands to reason, if women find it helps make their skin soft, clear, smooth and look years younger, younger women may find it helps retain the "bloom of youth" long past their twenties. TRIAL OFFER. Send name and address. Send only $1.00. We pay postage. Guaranteed you must be satisfied with results, or return what's left and get all your money back.

and dyeing of the wool. Kashkais are especially noted for a golden yellow dye which they extract from the weld plants growing wild on the hills and enrich with a little madder.

Kashkai rugs are woven with warp wool and weft threads, and the selvages are overcast with wool in the various colors of the design. The designs are geometric and rectilinear, usually with a diamond-shaped center medallion. A characteristic motif suggests a stretched lambskin, or to some people, a stylized beetle.

Unfortunately the output of Kashkai rugs is very small, and few reach this country. Rugs made by the tribes of the Khamseh confederation are far more numerous, for the Khamseh tribes look on rug weaving as a business rather than an art, as the Kashkai do. Khamseh rugs are much darker and less varied in color. Dark and medium blues and a dark brick red are characteristic, and somber colors are used to bind the selvages. But there is tremendous variety in the geometric designs. Typically they will have one, two, or three center medallions, and the backgrounds will be covered with small amusing motifs. In addition to the usual small sizes, these rugs sometimes come as large as 7 by 10 feet.

Both the Kashkai and the Khamseh nomad designs are also woven in the villages around the area north of Shiraz. In fact, village rugs are said to comprise 45 per cent of the Fars output. Like the nomad rugs these village rugs are made with wool warps and wefts which is inclined to produce a springy fabric, difficult to make lie flat. But many people prefer all-wool rugs because of their delightful colors and lower prices.

3. BAKHTIARI. In almost any wide selection of larger area rugs you are likely to find some designs in repeated lozenges and squares, known as "Bakhtiaris." Along the Zegros mountain range due west of Ispahan is the country of the Bakhtiari nomads, but oddly enough, these tribes do not make the rugs that bear their name. Bakhtiari rugs are woven in villages in the foothills slightly south, between the mountains and Ispahan plain—a section called the Chahar Madal. These village rugs acquired their name early in the nineteenth century when wealthy Bakhtiari chieftains began to build country homes in the Chahar Madal and to buy rugs for them.

There is great variety in Bakhtiaris, as some of the villages of the Chahar Madal are mainly Turkish, others Persian, and some Armenian. But the rugs also have characteristics in common—lovely colors, often beautifully blended, and generally more sophisticated detail than the nomad rugs. In one favored design well known in Persia as "the Bakhtiari design," the center field is divided into about forty-five squares, in a somewhat primitive rendering of the "Persian Garden" pattern of city rugs.

4. KURDISH RUGS. If you are very, very lucky, you may find a Kurdish design among a collection of nomad rugs. Today, fewer and fewer rugs are woven by the Kurdish nomad tribes who live within the borders of northwest Iran. This is partly the result of governmental attempts back in the nineteen thirties to settle the nomads on the land. And, in recent years, high wool prices have tempted the tribesmen to sell all their wool for immediate profit rather than hold part of it back for rug weaving.

What few Kurdish rugs are turned out today are made northwest of Hamadan near the cities of Bijar and Senneh. The typical designs have a charming naïveté—stylized flower and geometric motifs in stiffly squared-off primitive renderings. There is nearly always a six-sided inner panel covered with small motifs. Sometimes this panel will feature a center variation of the "anchor design," a motif seen in some of the old Bijars and other rugs from the northwest areas of Iran.

THE YEAR OF THE INDIVIDUAL

INTRODUCING H&G COLORS FOR 1968

The great color explosion that has been going on around us shows no sign of letting up. Like a magnificent display of fireworks, just when you think it must have reached its climax, it sends up another glorious shower of hues. As H&G surveys the now and future course of color for the twenty-first consecutive year, we see a wealth and diversity such as we have never seen before.

The characteristic colors of today are not limited to the bold and brash, the sweet and pale, the deep smoky tones or the retiring neutrals: all of these are represented. And there is equal variety in the way they are being put together. For the color explosion, as you might suspect, has precipitated a big shake-up in the rules. As our awareness of color has sharpened, we have become more courageous about straying from the tried and true, more imaginative about color possibilities. Today, for instance, bold hues are used, not always and exclusively for exciting contrast, but, spread over large areas, to form surprisingly serene backgrounds. Pale hues and clean, quiet neutrals, on the other hand, are just as often used with surprising effectiveness as accents. Everything is upside-down as well as right-side up, which is to say that when it comes to building color schemes, anything goes, as long as you like the way it looks.

The big news this year is where color is used—the where being wherever you would least expect it. In a room where you would expect to see bright fabrics, for instance, the fabrics may be neutral and it is the furniture that glows with color. Or you may find a room's vividest hue in the carpeting, or the lighting fixtures, or the window blinds. In a venerable house, painstakingly restored, where you would expect to see colors "of the period," you may see instead the most sparkling colors of today. In mixtures of pattern, where you would expect to see mixed colors, too, every pattern may be in the same two hues, yet in another room where there is only one pattern, you find it switching playfully from one color to another, then to a third.

This is the year of the unexpected, the year to be adventurous. All the familiar rules for using color are overshadowed by the one big rule: to each his own. This year, above all, is the year of the individual.

SPIRITED COLORS YOU CAN COUNT ON

The freedom to be individual, of course, presumes a wide range of choice. But having the whole rainbow and all its subtle variations to choose from will do you no good if you can't find the colors you want in the things you need for your rooms. To make sure that you can, H&G brings out every year a palette of thirty-six spirited colors that you can count on. Aided by our color research consultant, Faber Birren, we choose hues that have been most warmly welcomed in the recent past and add to them fresh colors that indicate the trend of the future. Every color family is represented, so if you have a particular favorite, you will always find at least two or three variations of it, each in today's spirit. And you will always find colors to go with what you already have.

You can count on H&G's Colors not only because they are right for today, but also because they are bountifully available. An ever-growing group of manufacturers, now numbering well over 450, use H&G Colors for everything that goes into a house, from the floor (tiles, carpeting, stains) to the ceiling (papers, paints) and everywhere in between (upholstery, lighting, table and bed linens, decorative accessories). And since over 200 leading stores across the country now carry these products, your color thinking can easily turn into reality. When you plan and shop, you will find it enormously helpful to carry H&G Color Chips in either the wallet-size folder or the key-ring miniatures, along with our Pocket Color Dictionary that lists the manufacturers, what they make, and in which colors. You will find information on ordering these planning aids on page 230.

Newcomers for 1968

In our palette for the coming year you will find six new hues. Two are subtle neutrals—Pongee and Nutmeg—that make rich soft backgrounds against which you can play a medley of vivid accents. The other four—Pernod, Persian Blue, Zinnia, and Purple Anemone—are themselves bright accents, clear singing hues that add zing either to neutrals or to the other more familiar colors in the H&G roster. Pernod is the youngest member of our family of greens which are flying high this year because of their happy faculty of always getting on well together, of getting along with other colors, and of looking fresh and lively in all seasons. To see the many exciting things that are happening on the green scene, please turn to page 176.

THE MAGICAL POWER OF THE ACCENT...

In any room, color is used in the plural. Even an all-white room contains numerous shades of white, and it is impossible to imagine a room that does not contain some wood tones, plus, perhaps, the glint of brass or steel. Since the effect of any one color varies according to the colors it is teamed with, the combinations and the balance are what count. Just by changing the accent colors, you can actually change a room's whole mood. And in this year of the individual, the number of ways you can go about it have increased enormously. No longer are accents confined to the small dollops of color in accessories and decorative trim. Today accent colors turn up on the ceiling, on the floor, at the windows. Furniture increasingly wears an accent color—both upholstered furniture and the important painted piece. And often an accent hue may cover an area as large as a wall. In the rooms on the next six pages, you will see the magic of the accent working in many different ways.

... the many different ways you can ACCENT WITH H&G COLORS

Accent: POMPEIIAN RED

One brightly lacquered piece of furniture can be the accent that brings a room to life—witness the Pompeiian Red cane-wrapped Chinese table in the Anthony Ritters' New York entrance hall. The high-gloss Black Pearl walls, dark stained floor, and neutral rug make a somber allée in which the table and bench cushions gleam dramatically. Interior design, Stephen Mallory of Mallory-Tillis.

Accent: TANGERINE

A brilliant hue like Tangerine used to accent big splashes of another brilliant color like Blueberry Blue can create incomparable excitement. Such this-minute vividness is especially electrifying in the Anthony Ritters' otherwise traditional dining room where the inside of the Chippendale breakfront has been unconventionally painted to show off a family collection of old china. Interior design, Stephen Mallory of Mallory-Tillis.

Accent: RED APPLE

A long needlepoint rug, mainly Red Apple, brings the solo snap of vivid color to a hallway in a chiaroscuro of neutrals in designer David Laurence Roth's New York apartment. But a neutral can be an accent, too—viz: the marbleized dado and door frames in our new Pongee.

But the tensity of all three hues is considerably mpered by the white ceiling, the white rug. ıterior design, Blair Catterton of W & J Sloane.

Accent: PERSIAN BLUE

Accent: TANGERINE

Tôle chandeliers lacquered Tangerine accent the varied palette of rich neutrals that give a sturdy masculine air to designer David Laurence Roth's kitchen: Mushroom-patterned wallpaper, Pongee countertops, Putty ceramic tiles on the floor, and the walnut-stained cabinets.

Accent: ZINNIA

An antique Chinese table lacquered Zinnia supplies the one spot of vivid color in Mr. and Mrs. Jay Langner's quiet living room lined floor to ceiling in a Dalmatian-patterned Pongee print. The shutters have been painted Pongee, the floors bleached to almost the same color. Interior design by Angelo Donghia of Burge-Donghia.

Accent: GOLDFINCH

One of the newest places for a bright accent color is at the windows, especially when they are hung with architectural shutters in lieu of curtains. In this room designed for a young man, Goldfinch shutters bring a stream of sunshine to what might otherwise be a too shadowy background of foresty greens and blues. Interior design by James Tillis of Mallory-Tillis.

A TALENT FOR LIVING

SLEEPING BEAUTY AWAKENE

"It was an extraordinarily happy project," said Sandra and Richard Freeman speaking of the restoration of their 110-year-old iron-balconied house in New Orleans' old French Quarter, "and it has given us a wonderful new way of living." Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Freeman, III, still under thirty, and the parents of two very young children, are actively concerned about their city, its history, what is happening to it today. Roused by the neglect and decay of the beautiful house architect James Gallier, Jr., had built as his own home, they applied to it both their enthusiasm for preserving the legacies of the past and their talent for living in the present. With architects Richard Koch and Samuel Wilson, Jr., as mentors, they restored the house to its 1857 elegance, and with the help of designer Inman Cook and a lively palette of H&G Colors, they furnished and decorated it in their own spirited contemporary style. (Continued)

In the handsome double parlor, walls painted Lemon Peel shed a new glow on the fluted columns and pilasters and the lacy monkey face frieze. In library section, RIGHT, books are housed in brass étagères instead of built-in shelves that would detract from architecture.

The entrance hall, with its Mushroom walls accented by Tangerine-painted furniture, is a quiet introduction to the vibrant colors in the rooms beyond.

We had heard so many heartbreaking tales about the Quarter's historic houses being gutted and jerry-built into rental units," says Mrs. Freeman, "that a friend and I decided to remodel one as an investment, but to try to save as much as possible of its original architecture and scale. In the midst of our search for a good candidate, someone showed me this house—just for fun, because it wouldn't lend itself to being divided into apartments. I took one look and rushed to get my husband."

Her husband is a city lover, and New Orleans, where he grew up, is the city he loves best. In his family, civic responsibilities were a frequent topic of dinner-table conversation. Today, he devotes as much time as he can spare from his business to work with groups wrestling with the problems of our strangling cities. Dedicated to the idea that cities must regain vitality at their core, he responded immediately to the challenge of restoring the old house—a challenge of the type that is tempting young people in many other cities about the country. In dining room, cornice was broken, plaster almost gone.

"We had been living comfortably in a big old five-room apartment in the University district and hadn't thought of moving or building," Mr. Freeman explains. "But when we saw this beautiful house in such squalor, we both felt it was terribly important to try to bring it back to life, and at the same time, perhaps, make a dent in the decay of the neighborhood."

When the Freemans first inspected the house, its rooms were sliced up by crude partitions. Grillwork doors and marble floors were missing. Chandeliers were thick with paint, and Gallier's once delightful medallions and friezes were in grimy tatters. For six months after they bought the house, the couple studied eagerly every facet of its architecture. They pored over the original drawings they found in the Labrot Gallier Collection at Tulane University. They scrutinized other Gallier buildings and other houses of the period. By the time they were ready for a contractor, Richard Freeman knew every nail and stud in the house and exactly what was missing. His wife, who is exceptionally skilled at needlepoint, had begun to make seat covers for the dining room chairs.

"We both saw eye to eye about restoring the lovely details as faithfully as we could," she says. "Even the top-of-the-stairs gate we had to add for the baby was to have a Greek Revival molding." Only in the back wing, a complete ruin that had to be totally rebuilt, was the original plan revised. Its three small rooms and stairwell became a kitchen, a game room, and an elevator shaft.

It was Mrs. Freeman who held out for using part of the space for a game room—an intimate room where she and her husband dine by the fireplace, or sew or read after dinner—rather than for a laundry.

"It's a wonderfully cozy place, and besides, it makes more sense to have the washer and dryer and ironing things on the second floor."

Having commandeered most of the space where the back staircase should have been, she was able to convince her husband to install an elevator. "I hardly ever use it just to get something from upstairs, but if I'm carrying the baby and have her sleepy two-year-old brother in tow, it seems as if it were the most important thing we did to the house."

"Don't forget the air-conditioning," says her more practical-minded husband. "In this climate, that's worth twenty elevators."

When it came to furnishing the lofty, corniced rooms, the Freemans were equally unsentimental. Having preserved everything they felt was worth preserving, they saw no reason to turn the house into a nineteenth-century museum. They wanted it to reflect the way they like to live today. During the early years of their marriage, they had collected a few antiques and some wicker, all of which fitted into one room or another. But they didn't flinch from the contemporary sofas and étagères Inman Cook proposed for the double parlor, and they welcomed his suggestions for strictly 1967 colors.

"We started all this because we were so anxious to save the house," they say, "but once we moved in, we discovered that living in the old section of the city has all kinds of rewards. Conveniences, for one thing, and surprising privacy."

"It couldn't be a better house for the children," Mrs. Freeman adds. "The garden is completely enclosed, so I can leave them there by themselves, yet see and hear them from any room in the house."

"Our friends warned us that the traffic in these narrow streets would make parking impossible, but we just bought a tiny car and use the old covered carriageway as a garage. They also told us we'd be crushed in the middle of mobs of tourists. I'm glad we didn't listen, because we love the feeling of constant life around us, and our garden gives us more privacy when we want it than we could get on a three-acre site."

Columns and cornice of front door are characteristic of Gallier's work.

The Freemans like to entertain and have found the house an expansive people-lover. Sandra Freeman sets her tables sometimes with blue and white Spode, sometimes with Wedgwood. With both she uses the wineglasses that match the Parrot Green of the dining room walls. Her large silver tureen sees more service holding flowers for a centerpiece than it does for soup or gumbo. Party menus are built around such New Orleans specialties as oyster-and-artichoke casserole, or vol-au-vent of crab meat and mushrooms.

Even more satisfying than the convenient and contemporary way of life the Freemans have discovered and enlarged are the intangible rewards the old house has brought them. They live constantly with an exciting awareness of history and constantly enjoy knowing they have rescued and preserved one small part of the city they love.

The whole family loves to roam the Quarter.

that take more nerve than money

Timidity with color is fast becoming obsolete. One big splash of color used with courage and ebullience can make all the difference between a mildly pleasant room and one with real flair. Yet color itself—exciting color—costs you nothing. Red paint is no more expensive than brown, flaming orange fabric no more than pallid pink, wallpaper in three different colorings no more than an equal amount of one. A make-it-yourself bedspread in bold do-something colors can actually be a quarter of the price of a quietly ineffective one. And the rainbow is the limit, for in this year of the individual, the only rules are the ones that you set for yourself.

Doors of many colors—Parrot Green, Cyclamen, Tiger Lily, Goldfinch, Azalea—each continued in a broad swath across the ceiling, turn a narrow chopped-up hall into a bright place of passage.

Laminated window shades and chair seats and backs in a mostly one-color fabric make a real color impact with comparatively little yardage. Another bold gesture: painting the overwindow beam Sunflower, calling more attention to it by a grosgrain ribbon banding on the 55-cents-a-yard white cotton curtains.

Greens for all seasons

Green, the most amiable of all colors, rests the eye, lifts the spirit, brings the freshness of spring to every season of the year. Outdoors we are surrounded by green, which is no doubt why we find it so easy to live with, even at its most vivid. Greens are good mixers: take a walk in the woods when the leaves are new and you need no further proof that all greens go together. Look at any garden and see how friendly green is to other colors: the shy pink of the rose, the flamboyant orange of the poppy, the earth's brown, the lily's white. H&G's 1968 palette gives you seven great greens to work with. Three are green greens: Bronze, a deep serious hue; Fern, a medium green, cool and composed; Parrot, bright and spirited. Three others are reliable neutrals: Tawny Olive, almost brown; Pistachio, almost gray; Celery, very close to white. And suave Pernod, our new yellow-green, can change the look of a room faster than you can spell liqueur. When you shop for home furnishings this fall, you will see our all-season seven everywhere you look. Here and on the following two pages is a generous sampling.

SPRING BULBS
wash a rocky ledge with
A SEA OF COLOR

It is by no means certain that any one kind of terrain or any one background is necessary to the success of a spring bulb garden. But even the natural beauty of the season's earliest and gayest flowers is improved by the good gray neutrality of stones. Almost as a corollary, few backgrounds can be more felicitously adorned than stone by the traditional heralds of spring. So when the Jules Rabos of Armonk, N. Y., decided they wanted to plant a new bulb garden, the choice of the long stone ledge that guarded their front yard was almost automatic. Even so, they would never have dared anticipate the rippling sea of color, opposite page, on which the ledge rode so triumphantly seven months later. Between fall and spring, after some assiduous planning by landscape architect James Fanning, a good deal of catalogue scanning and order filling by the Rabos, and a day's help from a brace of experienced workmen with their tilling machine, a fine springtime bulb garden had materialized.

While this is no millionaire's plaisance, neither is it a scrabble patch. The total planting contains upwards of 1,300 bulbs, big and little, worth well over $150. Tilling, fitting, fertilizing, and planting the ground accounted for a like amount. So, including the planning, the whole adventure approached the $500 range. The bulbs, of course, are of top-notch quality, the best the Netherlands afford, which means the best. And with the ground put initially in such good tilth, the garden will know many more springs like this one with but very little required from the Rabos in the way of renewal or replenishment. You will find the complete step-by-step account of the transformation from ugly duckling to springtime swan, including a planting plan and a detailed list of the species and varieties chosen, in Gardener's Month, page 232.

Between fall and spring, a dramatic garden brings life to a bony granite ridge and stages a continuous color show that lasts for six weeks

The secret of arranging spring bulbs—scillas, hyacinths, tulips, daffodils and the rest—lies in "drifting" the varieties so that one plant grouping interlocks with another rather than in plunking them down in small blobs of color. The drift principle was freely adapted to the crescent curve of this particular garden. The effect, which is what counts, is to swing brilliant and constantly changing swatches of color across the planted area all spring long (this year the garden actually lasted until early June). At this early stage, the chief highlights from upper left downward, include the greigii tulips 'Zampa' and 'Golden Earrings,' with the dainty miniature daffodil 'W. P. Milner' along the left edge and lavender cynthella hyacinths between. The big creamy tulips in center are 'White Emperor,' a recently developed fosteriana hybrid, with Tulipa orphanidea and charming hyacinth 'Borah' beyond. In center and right foreground, the new greigii tulip 'Rockery Wonder' vies with 'Coral Satin.' The golden trumpets of 'Peeping Tom' daffodil, with scillas and grape-hyacinths for varying blue foils, separate the two groups. Atop the ledge, clumps of pink arabis file among and in front of fosteriana tulip 'Gold Beater.' The brilliant red tulips just visible at lower right are the irrepressible praestans hybrid tulip 'Fusilier.' Chionodoxas, miniature hyacinths, several small tulip species are among the oddments that season the 30-foot-long crescent.

GUERRERO

While the long granite outcrop served as a barrier against the highway, it cried out for the softening influence of flowers.

TTO MAYA

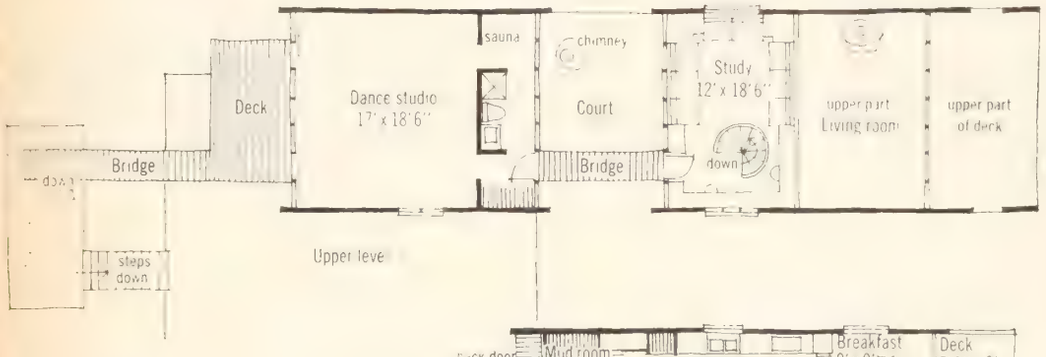
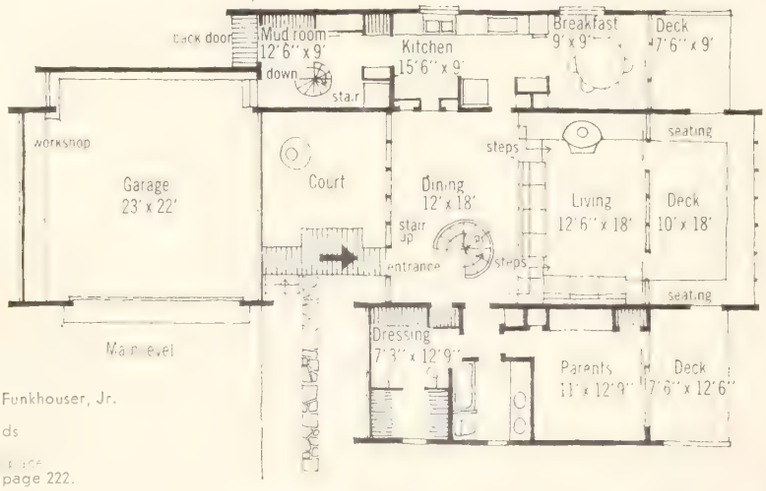
FARMHOUSE for a LIVELY FAMILY

Living room settee and hearth platforms hug sides of room, extend out onto the deck in the same formation. Vaulted ceiling, made of wallboard, has the look and smoothness of plaster. Day and night, the room is beautifully washed with light from broad windows on two sides and by dimmer-controlled downlights and ceiling spots.



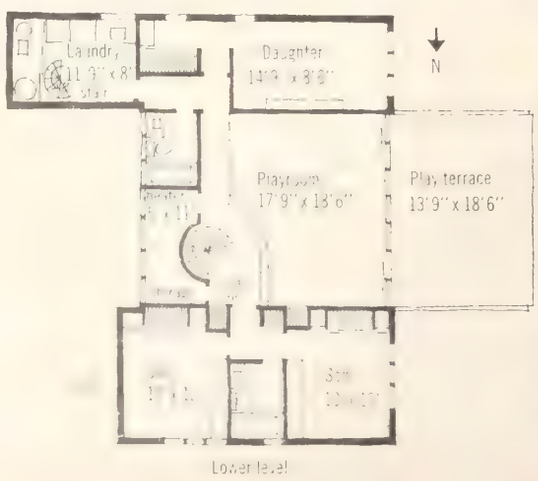
It took exactly ten years of planning and the arrival of three children to get the ground broken for Flintstone Farm, Mr. and Mrs. G. Nelson Funkhouser, Jr.'s mountainside house in Broad Run, Va. Built almost entirely of cedar, the utterly contemporary house comes as a delightful surprise among the mellowed estates of Fauquier County. The design is the work of architect Bruce Porter Arneill, but the Funkhousers contributed enormously to the plan. After ten years of living at the foot of the mountain in their old farmhouse, they knew exactly how they wanted to live once they were free of its inconveniences, and they were able to paint a word picture for Mr. Arneill that told him more than a dozen blueprints.



Mr. Funkhouser, an airline captain who flies about 80 hours a month, had spent a decade's spare time grooming the farm's 80 acres—quite unkempt when the property was first acquired—where he plans someday to raise Black Angus cattle. Like all gentleman farmers, he wanted an office. Mrs. Funkhouser teaches dancing and wanted a studio for her private pupils. The three children—Gregg, eleven, Doug, ten, and their sister, Lynné, six—were to have their own self-contained quarters, quite apart from parents, and adult territory was to be equally sacrosanct. Certain small musts (a toaster built into the breakfast room wall, for example) were also cited. How the house should look was to be entirely the architect's business. The Funkhousers knew his work, liked it very much, and looked forward to being surprised. (Continued)

Three distinct levels orient family activities

Taking advantage of the steep slope of the hillside plot, it was comparatively simple to build a three-story house with direct access to the outdoors from each living level.



At front door, the host awaits guests whom his wife and friend (right) greet from bridge.

Main deck forms a tripart balcony aerie with the master bedroom and breakfast room decks.

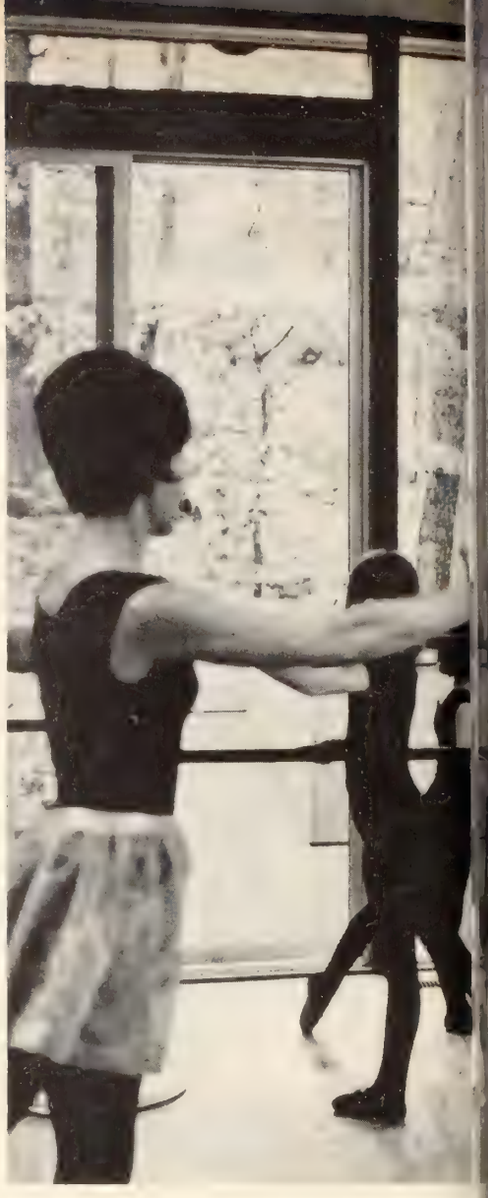
The plan provides three zones to live and work in, one for the children, one for adults, one for quiet. From the mud room, a little spiral staircase leads down to the laundry strategically located near the children's rooms where most of the washer-fodder originates. Parents use main staircase spiraling down from the dining area. Main living area is shared by children and parents and the youngsters have the run of the kitchen, the breakfast room, and its deck. Top level consists only of the balcony-office-guest room, and, over the bridge, the studio with its bath-dressing room and sauna.

GRAPHS BY HILL

Midway up the mountain, the house offers a welcoming stop on the steep ascent.

g room's glass wall is curtained outside with the refreshing fabric of greenery.



To be quite certain of understanding his clients' needs, wants, and vagaries, Mr. Arneill stayed with them for a week in the old farmhouse—"talking, talking, talking." Talked out, but reasonably sure that the indoctrination was successful, he went to his drawing board. Two months later, the Funkhousers accepted his proposal for a three-level house with an annex, and building went ahead with only one change: hip roofs gave way to vaults for a better relationship with the curves of the surrounding hills.

To command the superb downhill views of the countryside, the house was built on the steepest slope of the property. In the main, three-storied section, the children have the entire ground floor which includes two bedrooms and a bath for the boys, a bedroom and bath for their sister, and—separating these little suites—a communal playroom opening to a play terrace. The children descend to their quarters from the main floor mud room via their own spiral staircase. Never is dirt tracked through the house, and for family evenings in front of the fire, they come with shoes brushed, hands scrubbed, and shining faces.

On the main floor, the front door opens to the dining area and, down three steps, the 22-foot-high living room. Mud room, kitchen and breakfast room flank the living room on one side; on the other are the parents' bedroom, bath and dressing room—an adult ultima Thule. Each of these areas—breakfast room, living room, and bedroom—has its own deck and its own share of the western downhill view the house was built to capture. (Continued)

The playroom is a splendid place for sedentary amusements such as TV watching and stargazing as well as for livelier sports—bicycle races and play-acting on carpeted landing.

The house is a beehive of activity—partly shared, partly private

In the studio, Little Swans catch their breath.

Galley kitchen is "a dream to clean." Countertops are surfaced in bright blue plastic, cabinets have a natural wood finish, flooring is a new resilient vinyl.

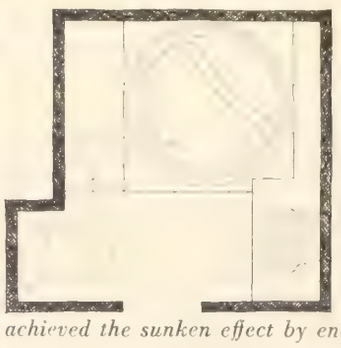
A gravel-paved courtyard separates the main structure from the annex which houses the garage and a great vaulted room above where Mrs. Funkhouser teaches the community children everything from classic jetés to jazz tap. There are two approaches to the studio: from the main house, a bridge spanning the courtyard, and from the driveway-turnaround, an outdoor staircase which is the dancers' entrance. Adjoining the studio is a bath-dressing room for getting into leotards, and, next to it, a sauna where the Funkhousers iron out the respective kinks of ballet and tractor-driving muscles. Across the bridge at the top of the main house is Mr. Funkhouser's office—long awaited, much used, highly prized. When it harbors guests (it has two built-in bench-beds), they nip across the bridge to the studio bath.

Except for cooking, which she does beautifully, Mrs. Funkhouser spends little time housekeeping. The house contains a minimum of furniture, half of it built-in, and very little to dust. She keeps track of the children with an intercom system that also fills the house with music, all of it taped, and she limits her entertaining to small dinners or an occasional big bash for fifty or so guests to whom she gives drinks and a buffet supper to eat wherever they like. Afterward, since this is a terpsichorean household, everyone climbs to the studio and dances up a storm. "It makes a nice ballroom for everything from the Frug to the Virginia Reel."

Six neophytes (Master Doug is the danseur noble) stretch and flex at the ballet barre, warming up for Mrs. Funkhouser's annual recital. Wall opposite windows is completely mirrored: "It's the best teacher in the world. A dancer must see herself to catch the flaws."

Parents' bedroom, like all rooms, is brightly lighted night and day. They use intercom system to keep tabs on the children downstairs.

balcony-study, Mr. Funkhouser s a complex but well-organized L-shaped desk with a pull-out e. Sometimes he his wife do their paper work in andem (there is enty of room for two), sometimes singly. On guest nights, two long platforms with foam-rubber mattresses make omfortable beds.



Make-over magic for bathrooms

A small bathroom is like the little girl with the curl: it is just as capable of being a darling as a dud. Today you can pack decorative interest, a feeling of luxuriousness, and a high degree of workability into even a minimum bath. To help you achieve the extra comfort that comes from the astute allocation of space and the visual exhilaration of color used in new ways, you will find any number of wonderful new bathroom components. Many of these, particularly the ones in which plastics play a part, which were formerly to be had only by special order, are now widely available. The most interesting, perhaps, are the new fixtures made of a fusion of plastic and fiber glass in mouth-watering H&G Colors. New wall- and floorcoverings are equally colorful, dazzling in pattern, elegantly tough. And warm-toned plywoods that do so much to banish a cookie-cut look are more varied than ever.

To show the magic transformations you can effect with these materials, H&G has remodeled two bathrooms, both antiques, one small, one large enough to be divided into twins—and designed two new baths, one for space that had been a pair of closets, the other for an erstwhile porch. In all four you will find a lively gamut of H&G Colors, a departure from the stereotype, and utilization of space that respects the preciousness of every inch.

In limited space, the luxury of a sunken tub

Even in a tiny bath, you can have a sunken tub, or a reasonable facsimile, without elaborate reconstruction. In an old brownstone bathroom, 6 feet 6 inches square, we left both the floor and the plumbing lines undisturbed, retained the same placement for the fixtures, and achieved the sunken effect by enclosing the tub in a dais flanked by three steps, LEFT. The bather simply walks up, instead of down. The new tub, made of reinforced fiber glass and molded in one piece with its square enclosure, was chosen for its handsome half-moon shape, its suitability to the available space, its roomy comfort, and its flexibility of use. You can sit on its ledge, park bath accessories there—or both. Above the tub, we built a round soffit to hold a lighting fixture and a circular shower rod. So that the bather may read or watch TV, we extended the plastic-topped lavatory counter, OPPOSITE PAGE, in a bookcase-ledge that frames the tub on one side and, to conserve space, slightly overlaps it. To make the tub the dominant decorative element in the room, we ordered it in Parrot Green, then repeated that refreshing hue in a bamboo tree wallpaper that gives the room a forest for walls. American Standard fixtures, Kirsch shower rod, Harcraft faucets.

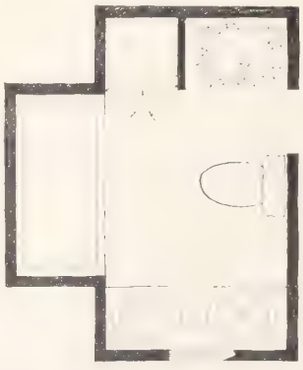
A bathroom from two closets



In the same house as the bathroom on the preceding page, two big side-by-side closets provided the space for a second bath, LEFT. Since they were directly above the first bath, the plumbing lines could be brought straight up from the floor below—the most economical way of extending them—and since the fixture placement in bath number one was satisfactory for this one also, it was duplicated—another economy. But there was no reason why these two baths in the same house had to look alike. For this one, we chose a new butternut-plank plywood for the walls and ceiling and saw to it that the grooving neatly matched at ceiling-wall juncture. We installed a brand new kind of countertop of reinforced fiber glass molded in one piece with its basin, teamed it with a new fiber glass tub—an elegant, loll-back oval housed in a 6-foot-long rectangle. Both fixtures are Tawny Olive which harmonizes with Pistachio ceramic tile in the tub alcove. American Standard tub and counter, U. S. Plywood paneling, U. S. Ceramic Tile.

Two baths in the space of one

For a pre-Revolutionary house in Newport, R. I., we designed twin baths, OPPOSITE PAGE, in the same space squandered on a big old-fashioned bath added to the house around 1900. The old plumbing, sadly defunct, was gutted and replaced in toto by an economical, back-to-back installation. For both bathrooms, each 5 by 7½ feet, we selected similar fixtures, including a new bathtub—a fiber-glass unit in which the tub and its three enclosing walls are molded in one piece completely free of crevices and wonderfully easy to clean. Although the baths are basically identical twins, they don't look it. We gave one room Ultramarine Blue fixtures and flooring; the other, flooring and fixtures in Pineapple. Then we switched the colors for the wallpaper and fabric—the latter used as shower curtains pulled out the full length of the rod, then swagged to flaunt the pattern. Universal-Rundle fixtures, Goodyear vinyl tile, Lightolier globe lamps, Formica countertop, Cannon towels.

Small porch into bathroom

To show how almost any kind of space can become a bathroom, we designed one, LEFT, for a little 7-by-9-foot porch to serve a new first floor bedroom added next to it. The proximity of porch to house simplified the plumbing installation, and a dashing effect was achieved with basic building materials—tile and plywood—chosen for their decorative qualities as well as their serviceability. Vividly colored 18-inch vinyl tiles made a brilliant paving for floor and—going up—for three walls. The storage cabinets and the wall behind the tub we paneled in cedar plywood siding of the type usually seen on exterior walls, but exploited here for its color and handsome texture. Using mixed rather than matched fixtures, we complemented a Pineapple tub with a Lemon Peel plastic countertop and brand new Blueberry Blue basins with new white plastic and brass fittings shaped like little medieval crowns. Kohler fixtures and fittings, U. S. Plywood siding, Eden vinyl tile.

DISCOVERIES AT EXPO

UP IN CANADA, THE HAPPENING OF THE YEAR—EXPO 67—BRIMS WITH INVENTIVE IDEAS YOU CAN ADAPT TO YOUR OWN WORLD

By Anne Stagg

Set on a breezy, island site laced with the sparkling waters of the St. Lawrence River, Montreal's Expo 67, as everyone knows by now, is a thundering success. Sixty-two countries have participated—more than in any other international fair—and they have brought together from all over the world a feast of superb ideas and experiments. The fair is charged with the zest of this adventuresomeness. Arresting innovations abound in furniture designs, lighting. Color is poured uninhibitedly on whole buildings, on fluttering banners, on paintings, on chairs, on native fabrics. Familiar materials—glass, wood, stone, canvas—are used in brilliant unfamiliar ways. By the very temporariness of its nature, of course, a fair offers architects and designers a liberating sense of freedom, a rare chance to experiment. Historically, the results have often been groundbreaking landmarks (Mies van der Rohe's famous chair was originally designed for his German Pavilion at the 1929 Barcelona Fair). Time will also bring out the classics of Expo 67. Meanwhile, there is the stimulant of the fair's existence, of its ideas. On the following pages you will see a roundup of Expo experiments that in many cases can be adapted immediately to become part of your life. The scale may be considerably larger than you would want at home, but the kernel of the idea is what counts, and how it sets your imagination racing—which is what a top-touch fair is all about.

H&G's HOME LEARNING

Among the most exciting developments of our times are the revolutionary new teaching techniques designed to expand children's natural ability for learning. Not only schools, but museums, libraries, and nature-study groups are using these new methods for stimulating programs. Since parents' interest is so vital in maintaining a child's enthusiasm, H&G believes every house should have a comfortably furnished center where the new learning can be carried on naturally and easily. It need not, of course, be earmarked exclusively for the children, since todays adults are enjoying modern learning programs, too. To help you plan such an area we have designed a Learning Center which can be adapted—in whole or in part—to meet your own family's individual requirements. Here are its salient features:

1. SPACE: Our room measures 12 by 15 feet, but its most important facilities could be adapted to a smaller room or to a learning center in one corner of a library, bedroom, or family room.

2. WORK SURFACES: Children's interests change as they grow, so our surfaces are flexible enough to accommodate a variety of projects.

3. LIGHTING: Comfortable lighting includes a luminous ceiling system

CENTER A new way to encourage the activities of a child's exploring mind augmented by portable lamps for close-up work.

4. EQUIPMENT: We selected two kinds of self-tutoring devices designed to be used by both children and adults. Naturally, the purchase of tape recorders, phonographs, and typewriters should be postponed until children are old enough to take proper care of them.

5. REFERENCE BOOKS: Two sets of encyclopedias, one for children and one for adults, are on shelves low enough for the children to reach easily. Don't worry if the books get a bit battered—nothing is sadder than a three-year-old encyclopedia that looks like new. (Continued)

The components are ready-made

To simplify planning and keep down the cost, we ordered everything for H&G's Learning Center from manufacturers' catalogues. One long side of the room is divided into three 5-foot sections, with a Parson's table at each end and a double nest in the center—all on castors ready to be moved into a variety of working arrangements. Kitchen cabinets above and below house delicate equipment; vinyl-covered chairs swivel and are adjustable in height.

Along one long wall of learning center is a bank of eight wheelabout work tables

A comfortable language laboratory

Two of the smaller tables pulled into position around one of the big work tables provide the varying levels most convenient for each of the learning aids that speed up modern language study. On the desk-high table are a teaching machine that gives you an instant accuracy check and a tape recorder with which you can compare your own accent with that of the teaching voice coming from the record player on the lowest table. Intermediate table provides space to spread out books and records. The two smaller tables when not in use nest under the higher table at the left. Parson's tables by Armstrong Furniture Co.; swivel chairs by Hamilton Cosco; Min-Max self-tutoring machine by Grolier, Inc.

Spread-out space for a big project

When two or more children tackle a major opus, such as painting and pasting on brown paper a diagram of the solar system, they need both space to work and space for tools and materials. For such occasions, the two 5-foot work tables can be pulled out from their corners, and added to the two center tables to make one huge work space of 5 by 7½ feet. Castors lock to hold the whole arrangement in place. The lower tables and undercounter cabinets are then free for use as parking places for paraphernalia. World Book Encyclopedia and Dictionaries by Field Enterprises Educational Corp.; Goodyear vinyl tiles.

On the opposite side of the room are marble-top table, bookshelves and typing table

Study center for adults

The other side of our Learning Center is designed for adult and teen-age learners. Two bookcases, placed back to back, serve as a divider and provide storage space for record player, slide projector, and teaching machines as well as books. On one side of the divider is a marble-topped table where parents can be comfortable brushing up on chess or space geography. Typewriter table on other side doubles as base for projector; screen hangs on opposite wall. Scientific equipment by Dover Scientific Co.; teaching machine by Field Enterprises Educational Corp.; Smith-Corona typewriter; The New Book of Knowledge by Grolier.

L-shaped set-up for reading and doing

When learning involves two activities, more or less simultaneous, an L-shaped work space is by far the most comfortable. It can easily be arranged in H&G's Learning Center by swinging one of the 5-foot work tables around to make a right angle with the work table in the other corner (see plan, opposite page). If the child working on the project—in this case building a medieval castle to illustrate study of the Crusades—needs a little help, an older brother or sister can work on it from the other side without creating a traffic jam. The work is well lighted from above by the luminous ceiling, and for good close-up light on fine details, a high-intensity lamp can be plugged into floor outlet. THE SMART WAY TO BUY WINE

How to spend your money wisely and well

BY HUGH JOHNSON

EDITOR'S NOTE: In an adaptation of material taken from his forthcoming book, "Wine" (Simon and Schuster, $10), Hugh Johnson, whose articles on the delights of enology appear frequently in H&G, tells how to select wine intelligently both in a restaurant and a store.

There are very few people whose choice of a wine is not guided, in the first instance, by its price. You can tell, when you look at a list, which is your territory—the top of the column, where the cheapest wines live, the bottom, where the great first-growths are, or somewhere in the middle reaches. I have been told time and again by restaurateurs and wine merchants that the way to move a wine is to give it third position on the list. The undecided apparently feel that first place looks downright mean, second, perhaps a bit stingy, but that number three is safe. If only they knew it, the cheapest wine was probably much better value while the third is a drug on the market which the restaurant is trying to get rid of.

You know your price range; the essential thing to do is to stick to it. If you are wondering what is the least you can pay for a bottle of wine, there is no sense in buying anything but the cheapest on the list. It is often very good. Restaurants usually find the carafe wine the wrong thing to save money on.

If, on the other hand, price is no object, it is still rash to head straight for the most expensive. The most expensive white wine on many lists is the honey-sweet Chateau d'Yquem. It is glorious after dinner, and superb, occasionally, before. But the only-the-best-will-do technique has led people to drink it with steak, which is, to put it mildly, rather like having chocolate sauce on smoked salmon.

There is, in short, an appropriate wine somewhere on the list for each dish, pocket, and temperament. The business of finding it is very different in a good wine store, where you have time and leisure to read and compare what is available, than in a restaurant, where wine waiters make some of their most satisfactory (to them) sales by using the strategy of pressure and hurry.

Studying wine lists

The best place to read a wine list is at home. Most of the better wine stores have a list of their current offerings which they willingly give to anyone who looks as though he might buy something. The first thing to do is to acquire one—or better, two or three from different sources—and take it home. Although you may not want a bottle at the moment, you can see what is available, compare the prices and values, and mark things to try for the future.

You can also look up in a reference book the wines you are not sure about, so that you can approach the salesman with confidence. I propose this plan humbly after having experienced the predicament of going into a store whose range was unfamiliar and being quite overwhelmed by the choice. If you are determined to come out with a bargain, something unspeakably delicious, and yet do not know where to begin, the man behind the counter, who usually knows next to nothing about what he is selling anyway, will sell you the one thing he does know about, which is the wine with the biggest profit margin. All these difficulties can be overcome if you ask for a list and take it home.

Are you choosing a wine to go with a particular dish or meal, or do you want to have something on hand that would go well with most of the food you might serve? Is your purchase an investment in future pleasure, or do you have the immediate moment in mind? Can you think in terms of buying a dozen bottles rather than one at a time? These are the things that will influence you. There are many reasons why buying wine a little at a time, only when you need it, is a bad idea. First, you have to remember to go and get it or to

Dutch & Belgian Cook Book

by Kay Shaw Nelson

Although Holland and Belgium are next-door neighbors, the cuisines of the two countries are essentially a study in contrasts, each delectable, but in a different style. The more opulent fare of Belgium also reflects the cultural and linguistic division between the Flemish and the Walloons. While the food of the Flemish north is similar to that of Germany, the southern specialties of the Gallically attuned Walloons are akin to those of France. But throughout the nation, gastronomy is taken seriously and its pleasures indulged in constantly. Street vendors tempt the passerby with the prized mussels, snails, eels, and the national passion, pommes frites. Pastries, sweet waffles, and other confections are sold at open shop windows. Sausages, seafood, Ardennes ham, game, and poultry are abundantly in evidence. In the fresh-air markets and groceries, the vegetables and fruits of the season are arranged with artistic flair—piles of miniature Brussels sprouts, tender white asparagus, crisp endive, hop sprouts, and huge blue grapes. Beer, the national beverage, lends its unique tang to many of the dishes for which Belgium is famous, such as Carbonnade Flamande.

In Holland, palates are equally pampered, but there substance is favored over subtlety. The Dutch delight in food fit to sink the teeth into—hearty soups and thick stews, pork, sausage, potatoes, cabbage, robust breads, substantial desserts, and the internationally renowned cheeses. Thanks to Holland's mariners and colonists, Dutch cooking is also spiced with the exotic flavors of the East Indies. Curries, Indonesian dishes such as nasi goreng and saté, and the remarkable institution known as the rijsttafel (rice table) have found a second home in Holland. Nor should the local contributions to the world of gastronomy be underestimated. Among them are gin, delicious liqueurs, and, above all, the incomparable Hollandaise sauce, for although it was the French who thickened and perfected it by adding egg yolks, it had its genesis in beurre Hollandaise, a simple melted butter sauce for fish.

APPETIZERS

Eggs Meulemeester
(Oeufs Meulemeester)

This dish has long been a favorite in the historic Belgian city of Bruges. It may be served as an appetizer or as a brunch dish.

6 hard-cooked eggs
½ pound (about 10) cooked and shelled large shrimp
¾ cup light cream
1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
2 teaspoons minced chervil
2 teaspoons sharp mustard
½ cup grated Parmesan cheese
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
Butter

Peel the eggs and cut them into shreds. Cut the shrimp into bite-size pieces. Combine the eggs and the shrimp with the cream, parsley, chervil, mustard, and 1/3 cup of the cheese. Season with salt and pepper. Spoon into a shallow baking dish. Sprinkle with the remaining cheese and dot with butter. Bake in a preheated 400° oven until the mixture is heated through and golden on top, about 10 minutes. Serves 4.

Dutch Herring
(Haring)

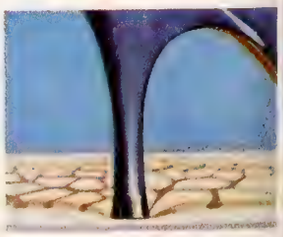
So popular is herring in Holland that the arrival of the first catch of the "groene haring," green herring, is a widely heralded national event and a barrel of the culinary prizes is formally presented to the Queen. Passersby often stop at a streetside pushcart or open-air stand for a snack of raw herring and chopped onion. Various dishes, including this appetizer, feature this favorite fish.

Serve chilled bite-size pieces of pickled herring, garnished with chopped fresh parsley, onion and tomato slices, with toast and sweet butter. Cool beer is a customary accompanying beverage.

Cheese Truffles
(Kaastruffels)

Two of the finest Dutch cheeses are the round, crimson-coated Edam and the yellow Gouda. Both are mild, firm, and similar in flavor. These little appetizers are made with Gouda or Edam cheese and two other fine Dutch products, butter and pumpernickel. They are excellent with chilled genever (Dutch gin).

¼ pound butter, softened
¼ pound grated Gouda or Edam cheese
¼ teaspoon paprika
Salt, freshly ground pepper, grated nutmeg to taste
3-4 slices pumpernickel



Combine the butter, cheese, paprika, salt, pepper, and nutmeg and mix well. Chill for 20 minutes. Shape into small balls. Chill 30 minutes. Toast the pumpernickel twice and whirl in a blender or crush with a rolling pin to make crumbs. Roll each cheese ball in the crumbs. Makes about 20.

Shrimp-filled Tomatoes
(Tomates Farcies Crevettes)

Small tomatoes stuffed with tiny shrimp and mayonnaise are one of Belgium's most popular dishes, for a snack or as part of a meal.

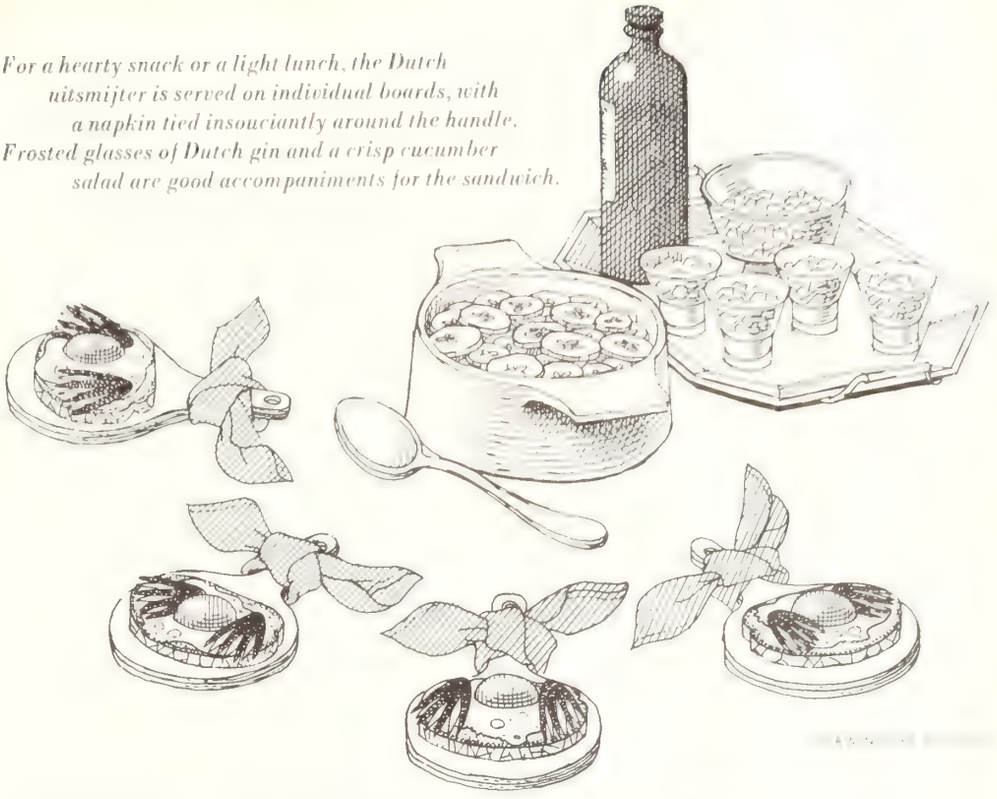
10 firm small tomatoes
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
2 cans (5 ounces each) small or medium shrimp, drained and deveined
1 cup mayonnaise, preferably homemade
2 teaspoons sharp mustard
Chopped fresh chives

If the tomatoes are truly firm, peel them. Otherwise, leave them unpeeled. Cut a slice from the top of each tomato and carefully spoon out the pulp, seeds, and liquid. Invert to drain. Sprinkle the cavities lightly with salt. Wipe the shrimp dry with paper toweling. Set aside 20 of them to use as a garnish. Combine the mayonnaise and mustard, salt and pepper. Blend until smooth. Add the remaining shrimp and mix to combine. Fill the tomato shells with the mixture, dividing evenly between them. Shape tops into a mound with a spoon. Place 2 shrimp on the top of each mound. Sprinkle with chopped chives and chill. Serve with watercress, if desired, as an appetizer or first course. Serves 10.

Uitsmijter

The open-faced sandwich called uitsmijter (pronounced out-smay-ter) is the favorite snack in Holland. It is sold at the numerous sandwich shops, sometimes accompanied by a fresh cucumber salad. To make, place several thin slices of cold cooked ham or beef on a slice of buttered white bread and top with one or two fried eggs. Garnish with a dill-pickle fan or gherkin.

Canapés of the Chevaliers du Fourquet
(Les Toasts des Chevaliers du Fourquet)



Melt a generous amount of butter in a skillet. Add a few chopped shallots and fresh oysters. Cook just long enough to curl the edges of the oysters. Meanwhile, trim crusts from slices of white toast and fry lightly in butter in another skillet. Cover with a thin slice of cooked ham, a spoonful of minced mushrooms that have been sautéed in butter, and the poached oysters. Add a little heavy cream to the oyster drippings remaining in the pan, mix well and pour over the oysters. Serve these hearty canapés immediately, to be eaten with a knife and fork as an appetizer or first course.

Dutch Little Meat Balls
(Bitterballen)

Although these savory small snacks are called meat balls, they are actually a type of croquette.

¼ cup butter
1 cup beef or veal stock
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Freshly grated nutmeg to taste
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste
3 tablespoons finely chopped onion
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
1½ cups finely chopped cooked meat (beef or veal)
Bread crumbs
1-2 eggs, beaten
Fat for deep frying

For a hearty snack or a light lunch, the Dutch uitsmijter is served on individual boards, with a napkin tied insouciantly around the handle. Frosted glasses of Dutch gin and a crisp cucumber salad are good accompaniments for the sandwich.

Melt the butter in a saucepan. Stir in the flour and blend well. Add the stock, ⅓ cup at a time, and stir after each addition. Cook slowly, mixing well, until the sauce is smooth and thick. Add the Worcestershire, nutmeg, salt, pepper, onion, parsley, and meat. Mix well and cook over low heat for 15 minutes, stirring occasionally to prevent the mixture sticking to the pan. Remove from heat. Spoon into a buttered pie plate or shallow dish and spread evenly. Chill 2-3 hours, until set. Shape into small bite-size balls. Roll in bread crumbs, then in beaten egg, and again in bread crumbs. Refrigerate at least 1 hour, or for several hours, if possible. Fry in 390° deep fat until golden brown. Drain on absorbent paper and serve at once with sharp mustard. Makes about 35.

3 tablespoons butter

Soak the beans in 10 cups water, covered, in an extra-large saucepan overnight or for 6-8 hours. Add the cloves, peppercorns, bay leaf, chili powder, and salt and bring to a boil. Reduce the heat and cook slowly, covered, for 1½ hours, stirring occasionally. Add the onions, carrots, and leek. Continue to cook until the beans and other vegetables are tender, about 1 hour. Cool. Remove the cloves, peppercorns, and bay leaf. Purée in a blender or rub through a sieve. Reheat. Melt the butter in a small skillet. Add the curry powder and paprika. Cook a few seconds and stir well. Stir into the warm soup. Serves 10-12.

Cheese Soup
(Kaas Soep)

4 slices bacon, diced
¼ cup butter
1 medium onion, finely chopped
2 tablespoons tomato paste
1 teaspoon sharp mustard
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
⅛ teaspoon paprika
Salt, pepper to taste
4 cups rich chicken stock
2 cups shredded Edam cheese
2 cups hot light cream or milk

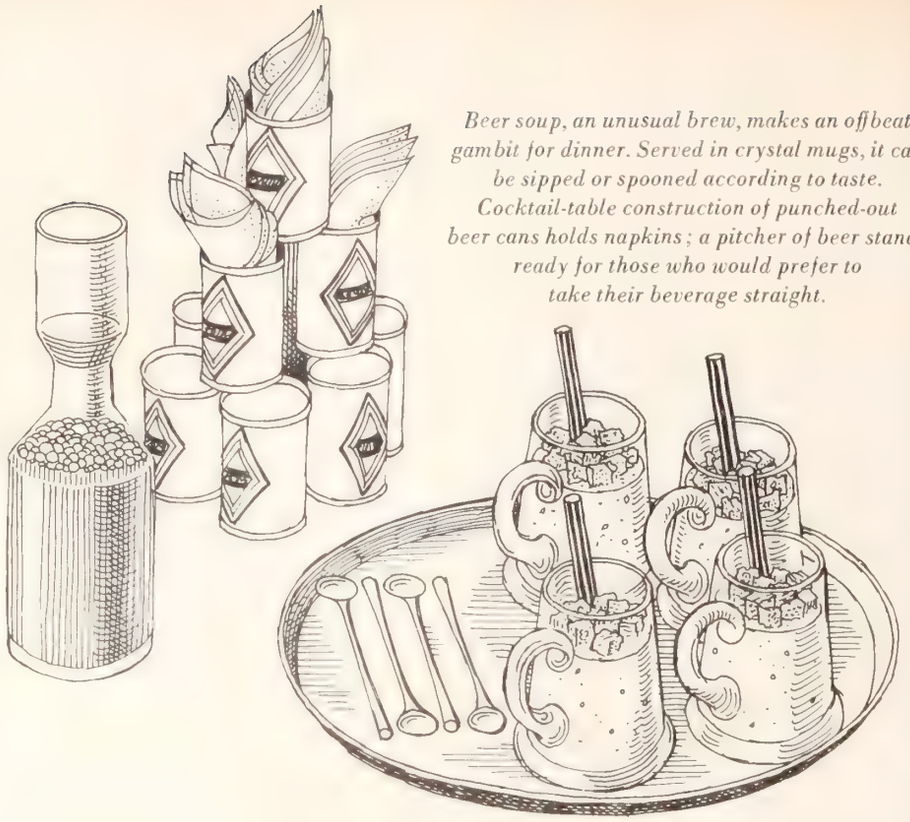
Fry the bacon in a large saucepan until crisp. Pour off the fat. Add the butter and melt. Sauté the chopped onion until tender. Add the tomato paste, mustard, Worcestershire, paprika, salt, and pepper. Mix well. Cook a few seconds, stirring, to blend the flavors. Pour in the chicken stock and bring the mixture to a boil. Lower the heat and cook slowly, covered, for 30 minutes. Add the cheese and continue to cook over low heat until melted. Pour in the cream and mix well. Serve with croutons, if desired. Serves 8.

Herb Cream Soup
(Potage Crème d'Herbes)

2 tablespoons butter
6 green onions, with tops, chopped
¾ cup shredded lettuce
½ cup shredded spinach
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
½ cup watercress
2 teaspoons sugar
6 cups chicken stock
Salt, pepper to taste
1 cup light cream
Chopped chives (optional)

Melt the butter in a large saucepan and sauté the green onions until tender. Add the lettuce, spinach, parsley, and watercress. Simmer, covered, for 10 minutes. Add the sugar, chicken stock, salt, and pepper and simmer, covered, 30 minutes longer, stirring occasionally. Add the cream and bring to a boil. Remove at once from the heat. Garnish with chopped fresh chives, if desired. Serves 6.

Beer Soup
(Soupe à la Bière)



Beer soups are very popular in Europe. This is one of several kinds prepared in Belgium.

1 quart beer
1 tablespoon sugar
Pinch each of cinnamon, ginger
Salt, pepper to taste
3 tablespoons heavy cream
Toasted cubes of French bread

Mix the flour with a little of the beer until smooth. Set aside. Combine the remaining beer, sugar, cinnamon, ginger, salt, and pepper in a saucepan and bring to a boil. Lower the heat and add the flour mixed with the beer. Stir and cook slowly, uncovered, for 5 minutes. Remove from the heat and stir in the cream. Serve over toasted cubes of French bread. Serves 4-6.

Belgian Cream of Endive Soup
(Potage Crème d'Endive Belge)

1 pound Belgian endive
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ cup chopped leek
2 tablespoons minced onion
3 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
Salt, pepper to taste
3 cups chicken stock
2 cups light cream, scalded
Freshly grated nutmeg
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley

Beer soup, an unusual brew, makes an offbeat gambit for dinner. Served in crystal mugs, it can be sipped or spooned according to taste. Cocktail-table construction of punched-out beer cans holds napkins; a pitcher of beer stands ready for those who would prefer to take their beverage straight.

Trim the base of each endive. Discard any wilted leaves. Wash under running water and drain. Cover with boiling water in a large saucepan. Add the lemon juice and cook slowly for 10 minutes. Drain well and chop. Sauté the chopped endive, leek, and onion in the butter until tender. Stir in the flour and blend well. Season with salt and pepper. Add the chicken stock, a cup at a time, and cook, stirring, until well blended. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat and simmer, covered, for 30 minutes. Add the cream and nutmeg to the soup. Serve garnished with chopped parsley. Serves 6-8.

Asparagus, Flemish Style
(Asperges à la Flamande)

One of the culinary treasures of Belgium and Holland is white asparagus, rather than green. It is often served as a separate course with a dipping sauce of chopped eggs mollet (with runny yolks), melted butter, and perhaps lemon juice or chopped parsley, salt, and pepper, which is prepared by each diner at the table. Belgian white asparagus, imported in cans or jars and sold in American specialty stores, may be substituted in this adaptation of the traditional recipe.

2 pounds fresh asparagus
6 eggs, cooked 5-6 minutes and shelled and chopped
¾ cup melted butter
¾ cup chopped fresh parsley
Salt, freshly ground pepper to taste

Wash the asparagus in running water, cut off the tough stem ends, and remove any large scales. Put in a large skillet and cover with boiling salted water. Cook, uncovered, over moderate heat until tender, a few minutes. Carefully remove from the water with tongs and drain. In the top of a double boiler, combine chopped eggs, butter, parsley, salt, and pepper. Spoon over asparagus and serve. Serves 4-6.

Pork Chops St. Hubert Style
(Porc à la St. Hubert)

8 loin pork chops, ½" thick
½ teaspoon dried thyme
1 tablespoon chopped shallots
1 bay leaf
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
2 cloves garlic, crushed
¼ cup olive or salad oil
2 cups dry red wine
Salt to taste
Freshly ground pepper to taste
Freshly grated nutmeg to taste
2 tablespoons butter
¼ cup currant jelly
2 teaspoons sharp mustard
1 teaspoon tarragon vinegar
2 teaspoons cornstarch

Trim any fat from the pork chops and place in a large shallow dish. Cover with the thyme, shallots, bay leaf, parsley, garlic, oil, 1 cup red wine, salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Marinate the chops, turning occasionally, for about 8 hours or overnight. Drain the chops and wipe dry. Strain the marinade and set aside.

Melt 1 tablespoon butter in a large skillet. Brown the chops on both sides. Reduce the temperature and cook slowly, covered, until the chops are thoroughly cooked, about 45 minutes. Remove to a preheated warm oven.

Spoon off any fat from the pan drippings and stir drippings with a fork. Add the strained marinade and remaining 1 cup red wine. Bring to a boil and cook until the liquid is reduced a little. Lower the heat and stir in the jelly, mustard, and vinegar. Cook slowly 1 minute. Dissolve the cornstarch in a little cold water and stir into the sauce. Mix at once and cook, stirring, until sauce is smooth and thick. Correct the seasoning, if necessary, and add the remaining tablespoon butter. Serve over the chops. Serves 4. A purée of chestnuts or buttered lentils makes a good accompaniment for the chops.

Ham and Endive with Cheese
(Gratin d'Endives au Jambon)

12 heads Belgian endive
2 tablespoons lemon juice
12 thin slices boiled ham
3 tablespoons butter
1 small onion, minced
3 tablespoons flour
2 cups light cream
1 cup shredded Gruyère cheese
Salt, freshly ground pepper, nutmeg to taste
Grated Parmesan cheese

Trim the base of each endive. Discard any withered leaves. Spread apart the leaves and hold under running water to remove any dirt particles. Invert to drain. Place in a large saucepan and cover with boiling water. Add the lemon juice. Cook over low heat for 10 minutes. Remove the endive from the water and drain well. Roll a slice of ham around each endive. Arrange in a buttered shallow casserole with the ham seam-side down on the dish.

Melt the butter in a saucepan and sauté the onion until soft. Stir in the flour and blend well. Add the cream a little at a time and cook over low heat, stirring, until sauce is thick and smooth. Add the Gruyère, salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Continue to cook over low heat, stirring occasionally, until the cheese is melted. Pour over the endive and ham rolls. Bake in a preheated 400° oven for about 30 minutes, or until tender. Sprinkle with grated cheese. Serves 6.

Dutch Hodgepodge
(Hutspot)

This traditional Dutch dish made with various cuts of beef is eaten annually on October 3 to celebrate the end of the Spanish siege of Leyden in 1574 when the starving populace was given hutspot.

2 flank steaks (about 2 pounds)
1 teaspoon salt
1½ pounds carrots, scraped and sliced
2 pounds (about 8 medium) potatoes, peeled and quartered
¾ pound onions, chopped
2 tablespoons light cream or milk
2 tablespoons butter
Salt, pepper to taste

Cut any membranes and fat from the flank steaks. Put in a large saucepan with the salt and 1 quart water. Bring to a boil. Remove any scum that rises to the top. Lower the heat and simmer, covered, about 1½ hours. Add the vegetables and simmer another hour, or until the vegetables are tender. Remove the meat to a warm platter and cut across the grain into strips. Take out the vegetables and mash with the cream, butter, salt, and pepper. Add a little of the broth, if desired. Spoon the vegetables onto a platter and surround with the meat. Serves 6.

Pork Chops with Apples
(Hete Blikse[illegible])

6 medium potatoes, peeled and cubed
6 apples, peeled, cored, and cubed
2 medium onions, chopped
2 cups beef stock
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
Salt, pepper to taste
6 center-cut loin pork chops
12 fresh pork sausage links
2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley

Dutch treat for dinner, Pork Chops with Apples, suggests an appropriate, amusing centerpiece of red paper apples suspended from a metal tree, apple-shaped trivets in place of mats. Pork chops, ringed by sausages, are arranged crown-roast style around the mound of mashed potato and apple.

Combine the potatoes, apples, onions, beef stock, cinnamon, salt, and pepper in a large saucepan. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat and cook slowly until the potatoes are tender and most of the liquid has been absorbed, about 40 minutes. Keep warm.

Meanwhile, cut any excess fat from the pork chops and melt 1 piece of it in a skillet. Brown the pork chops on both sides. Season with salt and pepper. Add ¼ cup water and simmer, covered, until well done, about 30 minutes.

Cook the pork sausage until well done. Drain on paper toweling.

To serve, spoon the warm potato and apple mixture into a mound in the center of a platter. Sprinkle with the parsley. Arrange the cooked pork chops and sausages around the potato mixture. Serves 6.

Filled Veal Cutlets
(Blinde Vinken)

2 slices dry white bread
¼ cup milk
½ pound bulk sausage
½ cup chopped fresh parsley
Salt, freshly ground pepper, grated nutmeg to taste
8 thin veal cutlets
¼ cup butter
1 cup sliced mushrooms

Soak the bread in the milk until soft. Mash with a fork and add to the sausage with the parsley, salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Mix well. Season the veal cutlets with salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Place a spoonful of the sausage mixture on each cutlet and roll up, enclosing the stuffing completely. Fasten with toothpicks. Heat the butter in a skillet and brown the stuffed cutlets. Add 1 cup water and cook slowly, covered, about 30 minutes, or until the veal is tender. Add more water, if necessary. Remove the cutlets and keep warm. Scrape the pan drippings with a fork. Add the mushrooms and cook slowly for 4 minutes. Pour over the cutlets and serve. Serves 4–6.

Fish Casserole with Mustard Sauce
(Visschotel met Mosterdsaus)

1 pound cod fillets
1 tablespoon wine vinegar
4 sprigs parsley
Salt, pepper to taste
1½ pounds potatoes
¾ cup warm milk
½ cup butter
Freshly grated nutmeg
2 medium onions, sliced
3 tablespoons flour
¼ cup prepared mustard
¼ teaspoonful paprika
2 tablespoons lemon juice
⅓ cup cubed Edam or Cheddar cheese

Put the cod fillets, vinegar, parsley, salt, pepper, and 1½ cups water in a saucepan. Bring to a boil. Lower the heat and cook gently, covered, until the fish is tender, about 10 minutes. Remove the fillets and break into bite-size pieces. Strain the liquid and reserve 1½ cups.

Meanwhile, peel the potatoes and boil until tender. Drain and mash while still warm. Add the warm milk, 2 tablespoons butter, salt, pepper, and nutmeg to taste. Beat until fluffy and free of any lumps. Sauté the onions until tender in 3 tablespoons butter and set aside.

Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a saucepan and stir in the flour, blending well. Add the strained fish stock, ½ cup at a time, and cook, stirring, until sauce is thick and smooth. Stir in the mustard and paprika and season with salt and pepper. Bring to a boil and remove from the heat.

Arrange half the fish pieces and half the onions in a buttered shallow casserole. Spread evenly and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of lemon juice. Cover with half the mustard sauce and then a layer of half the mashed potatoes. Spread evenly. Repeat the layers, topping with mashed potatoes. Dot with butter and the cheese cubes. Cook in a preheated 350° oven for 30 minutes. Place under the broiler for the last few minutes, until golden and bubbly. Serves 6.

Meanwhile, wash the mushrooms quickly and wipe dry. Snip off any tough stem ends. Cut into quarters. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a skillet. Add the lemon juice and sauté the mushrooms for 4 minutes. DESSERTS

The Hague Bluff
(Haagse Bluf)

This favorite dessert of Dutch children is so named because it is made out of practically nothing, but looks like a great deal.

1 egg white
½ cup granulated sugar
3 tablespoons red currant or raspberry syrup

Beat the egg white with an electric mixer or rotary beater until fluffy. Add the sugar and syrup, a little at a time, and continue beating until light and fluffy. Spoon into dessert dishes and serve with cookies. Serves 4.

Beat the egg whites until stiff, but not dry. Fold into the wine mixture. Spoon into serving dishes. Garnish with whole strawberries, if desired. Serves 4.

Spice Cookies
(Speculaas)

Favorites in both Belgium and Holland, these thin, well-seasoned cookies can be cut into various shapes to suit the occasion, such as that of Santa Claus for Saint Nicholas Day. There are several recipes for them. This is a popular one.

½ cup softened butter
½ cup brown sugar
¼ cup granulated sugar
1 egg
Grated rind of ½ lemon
2 teaspoons cinnamon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
Salt to taste
2 cups all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons and about 1 teaspoon milk

Cream the butter. Add the brown sugar and then the granulated sugar and cream all together. Add the egg and beat until light. Stir in the grated rind. Mix in the cinnamon, nutmeg, cloves, and salt. Add the flour, a little at a time, alternating with the milk. This dough should be fairly stiff and easy to roll. When the dough is well mixed, divide it into 2 parts. Roll out each part on a floured board to a thickness of ⅛". Cut into small bars or any desired shape. Place on cookie sheets and bake in a preheated 375° oven for 15 minutes, or until golden brown. Makes about 2 dozen, depending on the shapes.

Thin Pancakes
(Flensjes)

Beat with a whisk until the batter is smooth and thin. Lightly grease a 6" or 7" skillet with butter and pour in 2 tablespoons of the batter from a small glass or cup. Tilt the pan at once so the entire surface is coated. Cook until the edges shrink from the sides of the pan. Remove from the pan by inverting onto a plate. Sprinkle lightly with confectioners' sugar. Place a spoonful of jelly along the center and roll up. Keep warm until all pancakes are cooked. Serve immediately. Makes about 24 pancakes.

der it every time. Second, you ever have the right wine on hand someone turns up out of the lue, and, besides, it is a good feel- ig to have a rack of assorted wine ottles in the house. Third, the ine is never at its best if you open just after a quick flight from the orner store. Fourth, and worth onsidering, is that orders of a ozen bottles at a time are often lessed by a discount. Carrying his way of thinking a little further s starting what is so impressively alled a cellar.

Really long-term buying, lay- ig down young wines to go hrough their essential stages of evelopment under your roof, can e fascinating and even profitable. Vine always costs less, naturally nough, when it first comes on the narket, too young to drink, than hen it has been stored and ma- ured for several years. Nowadays ery few people do lay down wine n the old-fashioned way, but this loes not weaken the arguments or it. The principal one against it, n most cases, is lack of space.

Very few new houses, even in 'rance, are built with wine cellars. The number of people who have he satisfaction of going down a short flight of stairs into their little ault of wine, therefore, must be declining all the time. Architects and builders, who are so careful to provide utility rooms for every other aspect of life, might well con- sider changing this state of af- fairs, but I cannot see it happen- ng. Most of us, then, must find a cellar substitute. The closet under he stairs is often suggested. It is not ideal because it is usually too small and stuffy, suffers the pound- ing of feet on the treads above it all day, and doubles as a broom closet. But most houses and apart- ments have some accessible and otherwise wasted space. And cabi- nets or closets can easily be fitted with racks for bottles. All that is asked of the wine-storage area is that it never freezes, never boils, but remains at a comfortable temperature (even central-heating temperature will probably do little harm so long as it stays constant). Constancy is the most important thing. It is the reason why under- ground storage is traditional and best for wine. But the stable room temperature of heated and air-con- ditioned modern apartments has almost the same effect.

Light and vibration are the other things which can harm wine, but they are comparatively easy to avoid. Finally, wine must be stored lying down. All wine bottles which are going to be kept for longer than a week or two should stay horizontal. If you put the label up- permost, it helps you remember where the sediment, if any, will be in the bottle—lying along the side opposite the label. The reason for keeping bottles lying down is per- fectly simple; it keeps the corks wet, which prevents them shrink- ing and letting the air in.

Aging wine

It is wrong to assume that because a wine is older, it is better. Tales of wonderful cobwebby old bottles have led to a general belief that age is in itself a good thing for wine. That is only partially true. There are wines that need a long time to mature. But there are others that are ruined by being kept for even as much as a year or two.

There is more profit in laying down good red wines than any other kind. Vintage port demands it. It forms sediment in such a way that if it is not drunk where it has been resting, or at least decanted there, it will be stirred up and re- main muddy for a long time. But almost all wines benefit by a little keeping. The improvement even in a bottle of the cheapest available red wine which I kept for a year was astonishing. Wine stores can save costs by bottling their cheap lines when they are called for, so that the wine you buy could have only a few days in bottle behind it. It is a well-known phenomenon that the transfer from barrel to bottle leaves wine in a shocked state for a while. It tastes as though there is something wrong with it for a month or so. The trade knows it as "bottle sickness." A great deal of wine is drunk in this state by people who expect it to be drinkable when it is sold and it is not. Good stores avoid this by aging their wine before putting it on the market, but it still pays to buy and keep all your red wine for at least three months before drinking it. The one wine which is an exception to this rule is Beau- jolais: it is best as young as you can get it.

The laying down of fine wine to mature is a subject in itself. Clarets are the wines which most demand this treatment. Burgun- dies also benefit enormously, more or less depending on the vintage. But there are others, too, which can be laid down with profit, par- ticularly the wines of the Rhône valley, Portugal, Spain, California, and Italy.

The wine to choose for drink- ing straight away or in the near fu-

should slit the skin. Although only grinding on a Carborundum will actually resharper a knife, you can delay the operation by copying a butcher and toning up your knife before using with a few strokes on a sharpening steel. This, contrary to popular opinion, does not sharpen the edge, but realigns the tiny, invisible teeth that have been pushed out of position by cutting. To realign, hold the steel in your left hand, slanting away from you, rest one side of the knife edge lightly against the steel at a 20 degree angle and draw it quickly toward you in a curving arc until the tip of the blade touches the bottom of the steel. Bring back to the original position on the other side of the steel and repeat. About four light strokes per side should be enough, although as the edge gets duller, you may have to increase the pressure. For a professional sharpening, ask your butcher to recommend a reputable local sharpener, or find out from your retailer if the manufacturer offers such a service.

Properly cared for, a good knife can help you become a good cook, for it not only improves your performance and efficiency, but gives you the confidence to tackle jobs such as boning or filleting which you might never have contemplated before.

Royal Worcester Flameproof Porcelain looks so lovely by candlelight it's hard to believe it slaved in a hot stove all day

Cook in it. Serve in it. But please don't eat those luscious fruits that grow all over it. They're for decoration. Not dessert. The Royal Worcester collection of Flameproof Porcelain consists of casseroles, ramikins, baking dishes, and souffles in all sizes and shapes. All in white. The better to show off the sun-ripened colors, individually fired in the great English tradition. From $2.00 to $45.00 at stores that serve only the best. Casserole shown, 2¼ qt., $25.00. Also available in Canada. Write to Royal Worcester, Dept. HG-F-9, 11 East 26th St., New York 10010 for a free Flameproof folder.

ture is either wine which has been laid down already, in effect, because the store has had it for a long time, or wine which is better drunk quite young (or which would gain little with age). In the second category are the less expensive wines—rosés, whites, and light reds. Cheap, sweet white wines always come into this class because they have been treated in such a way that age can do nothing to improve them. So does any wine which has been pasteurized. But there is unfortunately no way of telling in most cases whether it has been pasteurized or not, and all too many have. Aperitif and after-dinner wines—sherry, and tawny and ruby ports, for example—are always sold ready to drink and change very little, if at all, with keeping.

It used to be possible for stores to keep a stock of good table wines until they were really ready to drink, and list clarets at ten or fifteen years old as a matter of course. Now they feel less and less inclined to invest the money in them for so long. A quick turnover is their theme, and to this end they will assure the public that a wine is at its best long before it really is. Four-year-old clarets are offered as ready for immediate drinking. They will do if there is no alternative, but it is worth finding a store with a choice of clarets at least seven or eight years old. With most other wines, in most stores, sad to say, there is rarely a choice of vintages at all: one German vintage comes on the market as the previous one is used up. To go to a specialist wine store—or to buy the wines as they come on the market and keep them for yourself—is the only answer here.

The thing not to do at any price is to spend a lot of money on a bottle of a really fine wine which is not nearly old enough to drink—and then drink it.

5. BALUCHIS. In any group of nomad rugs, the Baluchis are hard to miss. They stand out among Afshars and other colorful types because of their no-color combinations of blacks, grays, camels, and beiges in bold geometric patterns.

People often think that because these rugs are known as Baluchis, they are made in Baluchistan, an area which today lies partly in Persia and partly in Pakistan. Actually they are made by nomad tribes in the eastern mountains of Iran, towards the Afghanistan border, who are believed to have been moved to the northern province of Khurasan in the eighteenth century by Nadir Shah.

As in Afghanistan, rug weaving with the Baluchis is a by-product of the much more important production of Persian lambskins for the fur trade. Their flocks consequently are predominately black and gray, with brown, beige, and white sheep in the minority. The scarcity of the white wool that is required for dyeing bright colors, along with the abundance of natural wool tones, accounts for the shadowy colors of the Baluchi rugs. At one time three shades of dark red, a dark and medium blue, and black were common. Today the natural wool colors predominate, accented by splashes of white, orange, gold, red, blue, or sometimes green, but seldom more than one or two at a time. These rugs have a great appeal for modern rooms, and they also make effective couch covers and wall hangings.

The sizes range from 3 by 5 feet to 3 by 6 feet, although once in a while you may find one a little larger. The selvages are always bound in black goat's hair, and most Baluchis today are made with cotton warps. The designs are simple and the motifs familiar—a stylized tree of life, the octagon gul, the pine cone, the small diamond motif of the H'ang Dynasty and the Chinese cloud band motif brought to Persia by the Mongol invaders. A great many Baluchis are designed as prayer rugs with a prayer niche at one end to be pointed toward Mecca. Baluchis also weave saddlebags that are greatly prized as cushion covers.

6. YOMUTS, TEKKEHS. In the northeastern-most section of Iran between the mountains and the border of the U.S.S.R. live the nomadic Turkoman tribes. Many of these peoples migrated across the border a generation or so ago, bringing with them designs more akin to those of Afghanistan, Bokhara, and other central Asian areas than to Persia.

The patterns, however, are familiar to most Americans. Yomut rugs are very like the popular Bokharas that are made today in Pakistan, although to experts the Turkoman gul (the octagon-shaped motif that covers the center ground) is readily distinguishable from the Bokhara or the Afghan gul. In the stores you may find these rugs labeled with the tribal names Yomut, or Tekkeh, or they may be labeled merely "Turkomen-Iran."

Turkoman rugs are variations on the "red rugs" of Afghanistan, and typical of this whole central region. Characteristic of the older Yomut rugs was a dark, plum-colored ground. Later the Yomuts began to copy the crimson red grounds of the popular Bokharas, and in some cases they even adapted the Bokhara gul. The predominantly red and black colorings are accented by touches of white, and occasionally, by yellows, browns, or dark blue. Although the Turkoman tribes weave on the primitive horizontal loom, their rugs usually have quite wide woven gilim bands at each end and long fringes made by knotting the wool warps.

While most nomad tribal rugs are geometric and rectilinear in design, it is well to remember that all geometric designs are not tribal. Many geometrics are found among the more sophisticated rugs woven in Persian cities.

BUT ONLY IF YOU USE IT.

To be sure of the quality, check the name under the cushion.

Look under the cushion of a sofa or chair. If it's a good one, you'll find the manufacturer's name there. When it's a name you recognize, a brand name, it tells you a lot of things.

It tells you the furniture is built to last—that you're not just making a buy for today, but a sound investment for the future. It tells you that the styling and design are authentic. That you're getting good, honest value for your money.

A brand name means quality and integrity. It's the manufacturer's way of telling you that he stands behind his product 100%.

With furniture though, you have to snoop to find the brand name.

It may be under the cushions of a sofa. Or the underside of a table. Or tucked inside a bureau drawer. Or on the end of a mattress.

That way, the brand name never detracts from the furniture's appearance. But it does add tremendously to your confidence and satisfaction.

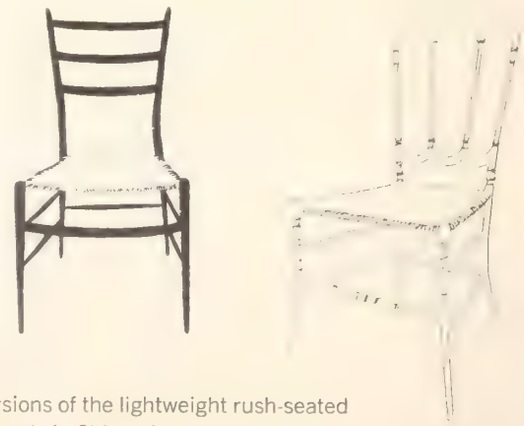
yacht-filled harbor, and the multicolored multifamily houses that line the shore all conspire to produce an atmosphere of peaceful ease that is almost palpable. An uninformed New Yorker might take the tall shoreline houses for picturesque tenements, but they happen to be very fashionable, very expensive apartments. The price of each, I was told, depends on the number of windows it has facing the water.

The road into town dead-ends at a large square at the top of the cove, where you have to park your car, like it or not, and walk. Continuing along the quay you come to the stands of the lace-makers working on their pillows—a technique the Portofino sailors are said to have brought home from Flanders around the thirteenth century. You can buy the results on the spot —anything from handkerchiefs to banquet-size tablecloths. Further on, around the bend, you come to an inconspicuous sign pointing up a flight of garden stairs to "il castello," the local name for the ancient fortress of San Giorgio. The stairs seem endless and when you reach the top, you still have to climb a steep drive for another quarter mile or so, but the castle and its gardens are worth it.

No one can really say when it was built. Evidently the Romans had some kind of fortress there, and the structure has been rebuilt or remodeled countless times over the centuries. It was last in active use as a military fortress during the Napoleonic wars but its swords were not finally beaten into ploughshares until 1870 when it was acquired by—naturally—an Englishman. Yeats Brown, the English Consul to Genoa, who is credited with starting the English invasion of the Riviera di Levante as Lord Hanbury did on the other shore of the Gulf, turned the fortress into a villa. It remained in his family until 1949 when it was sold to another family who lived there until six years ago, then gave the property to the Italian government.



Although the furnishings have been greatly reduced, there are still many beautiful antiques and charming decorative details. I especially loved the stairway walled in ceramic tiles, the wrought-iron sconces and lantern brackets, the fan-shaped wall fixtures of shell in the dining room, the porcelain stoves on the bedroom floor, and outside along the garden walk, a rustic fence, made partly of gnarled and forked branches of trees and vines carefully cut and placed to look as if they were still growing from the ground.

During one of our drives along the shore, my mentor pointed to the mountains looming up to the southeast. "You'll be driving over those on your way to La Spezia," she informed me; "that highest one there is the Bracco Pass." But I had negotiated enough steep grades bordered by dizzying drops, so I found a young man to drive me and the car over the mountains.

We stopped first at Zoagli, a few miles down the coast from Rapallo. For centuries, the women of Zoagli have been weaving velvet, especially cut velvet. There is a loom in every home, they say, handed down from mother to daughter. There are also many small companies that do both hand and machine weaving. I visited one of them, S. Cordani, whose fabrics are imported to the U. S. by Scalamandrè. The hand weaver was not working that day, but I pored over samples of the velvets she weaves to order, and over the bolts of fine machine-woven silk that you can buy right there. For $40 I bought about 8 yards.

Our next stop was Chiavari. I wanted to see the place where they make the graceful lightweight ladderback chairs that sell even in the U. S. for under $20. The little city's main street was thick with furniture showrooms, but the local tourist office referred us to the Sanguineti factory at Via Luigi Marana, 2, and Mr. Sanguineti obligingly showed us his line. Some of his chairs followed the traditional designs first created around 1800 by Gaetano Descalzi; the others were modern variants. The basic designs had also been adapted to rocking chairs, settees, and headboards, all of which were new to me. Picking up one of the chairs, Mr. Sanguineti bounced it hard on one leg to show how strong it was. The India cane seats, he explained, are woven right on the chair frames, not in the factory, but by women working in their own homes in a technique similar to that used for Panama hats.

A few miles beyond Chiavari, the Aurelian Way leaves the coast and starts zigzagging upward and inland. I was surprised to learn later that the Bracco Pass is only 2,000 feet high. But since the road makes the whole climb from sea level in less than 20 miles, it is a steady succession of 4 to 12 per cent grades, perilous switchbacks, and, to mitigate them somewhat, breathtaking views. It is not easy to enjoy the view, however, if you are stuck behind a slow-climbing pair of tandem trailers that there is not a prayer of passing on the two-lane road.

"What is it like in winter?" I asked the driver.

"Icy."

"And Caesar's legions really came this way?"

"Yes, and Hannibal and his elephants."

The country becomes wild and rugged, and much colder than the coast. As you near the summit you can look southward down the precipitous valleys to the sea and the famous vineyards of the Cinqueterre—the five towns linked only by a footpath and the Genoa-Rome railroad. Today they are becoming popular as summer resorts, but the easiest way to visit them all in one trip is still by boat.

After the drive over the mountains, which is not as scenic on the southward descent, your first glimpse of the serene and sparkling Gulf of La Spezia seems almost a mirage. Even if you hit the city in the midst of Saturday noon traffic and the whole Italian Navy seems to be on shore leave, you can still understand the Gulf's attraction for poets, from Dante and Petrarch on down.

After my driver had departed for home, I drove around the west shore of the Gulf to Porto Venere, a one-time Roman fortress turned fishing village, and the embarkation point for boat trips up the coast. Although I had heard it referred to even recently as an "undiscovered" spot, I could not find an empty parking place, so I had to be content with scrutinizing from the car the ancient multistoried houses of the fishermen and the black-and-white-striped medieval church of San Pietro. Porto Venere, I remembered having read, was one of Byron's favorite spots. Then, returning to La Spezia, I drove around the east shore of the Gulf to Lerici, where Shelley spent the last few months of his life and daily sailed the boat in which he ultimately drowned.

As I was crossing the state line into the province of Tuscany, a few miles beyond, I thought how consistent it was that this tip of Liguria, too, had been "discovered" by Englishmen.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

A post-weekend "thank-you" gift for a hobby you didn't know existed might be a subscription to a magazine devoted to birds, wildlife, yachting, antiques—what-have-you. Or, if your hostess is an ardent gardener, what better than a nice gift certificate from a local nursery?

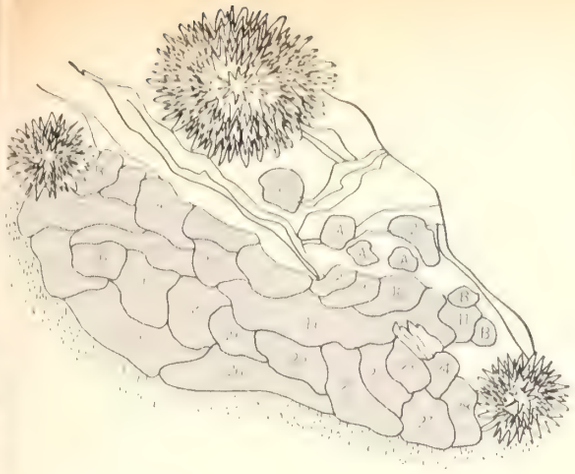
GARDENER'S MONTH



To establish a spring bulb garden as glorious as the one on pag 130, three preliminary steps are essential. The first, of course is the selection of an appropriate site. The second is the selectio and ordering of the plants that will populate it, and the third, th preparation of the ground and the planting itself.

While a huge granite outcrop might not at first seem the mos desirable location for a spring garden, the one in the Jules Rabo: front yard has the basic attributes that all good bulb plantings re quire: it provides the protection from cold winter winds that make for early and unblemished flowering. It offers cracks and crevice that are really ready-made plant pockets. It faces southeast whil actually being situated in the open, and thus receives and reflect the best light and warmth for spring bulb development. The rock dip steeply into the sloping ground in front of it (where most of th bulbs are growing) so that moisture is adequately retained an drained—an essential combination for success with bulbs. And thi ledge on a rise of ground in Armonk, N. Y., has sun from earl morning until late afternoon. While (Continued on page 234

PREPARING THE PLANTING GROUND

As important as the choice of site and selection of the bulbs themselves is the preparation of the ground in which the bulbs are to grow. In the Jules Rabos' front yard, a crescent of terrain was first cleared of the few extraneous yews that had been placed there in a vain effort to ameliorate the granite (1). Then a pair of workmen tilled the ground to a depth of 8 inches or more with a heavy-duty machine (2). Peatmoss and bone meal were spread and worked into the whole planting stratum prior to raking (3, 4, and 5). Once the design had been transferred to the bed in the form of flour outlines, the bulbs themselves were placed with studied casualness, variety by variety, and planted where they lay by one of the strong-wristed workmen (6). The final pre-winter precaution consisted of covering the entire planted area with ordinary chicken wire, bought in rolls 6-feet-wide, slightly overlapped, and held down by wood stakes (7). This was designed to serve the dual purpose of catching and holding windblown leaves as a sort of informal mulch and at the same time discouraging dogs from digging the soft earth. All the autumnal effort had paid off handsomely by April, opposite page, when the garden was in mid-peak bloom.

KitchenAid introduces the Super Disposer.

It's made by the same people who make KitchenAid dishwashers.

It does everything a fine disposer should do. For example, it pulverizes steak bones and chicken bones. Even grinds stringy things like corn husks. Extra-thick insulation makes it quiet.

If it jams, it eliminates the jam automatically.

spring-flowering bulbs will bloom under the branches of trees, the more sun they get the better their flowers will be. And, of course, sunlight is required after flowering for at least a few weeks in order to ripen the bulb foliage and encourage full development of the embryo bulb for next year.

Bulb selection is a matter of personal preference and budgetary limitations. (For the selections made by the Rabos and landscape architect James Fanning, see page 233.) Early ordering is most desirable not only to ensure your getting the ones you want, but because knowing what you are actually getting will help you in making adjustments in your plan.

The preparation of the ground involves not only making it ready to receive the bulbs initially, but to sustain successive seasons of good flowering. The continued life of spring bulbs depends on the soil in which they are planted and the depth at which they are planted. Under proper conditions, their life will range from five to twenty-five years (some tulips, planted deeply, will bloom year after year for two decades or more). No spring bulbs should be planted in manured ground lest root rot ensue. And any bulbs that are not firm and clean at planting time should be discarded at once.

The Rabos brought in a pair of trained nurserymen who tilled the desired areas mechanically to a depth of 8 inches. After three bales of peatmoss were spread over the area, together with 25 pounds of bone meal, tilling was repeated. (With bone meal, the principal constituent of which is superphosphate, thorough mixing within the root area of the bed is necessary for full effectiveness.) When the surface has been raked smooth, Mr. Fanning outlined the planting spaces with a handful of kitchen flour and spread the bulbs casually but at an average distance of about four times the bulb's diameter. Finally the workmen planted the bulbs at the proper depth. Proper depth, for general purposes, means earth from two to two-and-a-half times the height of the bulb above the top of the bulb, with tulip bulbs going a little deeper.

When the last bulb was in, the whole planted area was covered with ordinary chicken wire, loosely spread and held down with wooden stakes at edges and overlaps. This was a simple precaution based on the fact that large dogs, including the Rabos' own, like to dig in soft ground. (Incidentally, the protection was justified—for nothing larger than a chipmunk got through the wire or harmed the bed, and since for that reason crocuses were deliberately excluded, even the chipmunks had meager pickings.)

All the bulbs ordered for this planting were Holland grown, and obtained from a highly reliable dealer—facts that in themselves all but guaranteed good flowering. All were stored in a cool, dry garage until planting time. All were planted right-side up. The general range in order of normal flowering times and, in the main, of height of mature plants runs from chionodoxa, hyacinthus, and leucojum to the tallest and latest of the big tulips. First flowers—in what proved a most erratic spring season in the Northeast—opened early in April and the color was still good until the first week in June.

In addition to a proper start in life, maintenance of a good bulb garden requires yearly fertilizing with a standard all-purpose dry garden fertilizer; weeding, to reduce competition for available nutriment below ground; adequate watering in times of drought, especially in late spring when most of the new bulbs that will flower the following year are developing underground; and dividing crowded plantings among those bulbs, notably the narcissi, that tend toward diminished flowering when crowding occurs. In temperate climates, muscari (grape-hyacinths) self-sow and multiply from seed in agreeable locations in addition to multiplying underground. Tulips make one or more new bulbs each year at the expense of the old, with the largest of the replacement bulbs carrying the best flowers. Scillas, snowdrops, and snowflakes seldom self-sow but multiply quite freely if not planted more than 2 or 3 inches deep. Hyacinths multiply readily and in most instances produce more graceful flower spikes the second year than they do the first one after planting. Big tulips, except for the recent hybrids, tend to play out after a few years, with the species and greigiis going on indefinitely.

This is about all there is to making a bulb garden. Per dollar, the reward is great (top-quality bulbs cost about $1 for ten for the big standard species, $4 per 100 for the little "scatter" bulbs). Most of the work comes before and at planting time. The enjoyment of the flowers starts half a year later. And it goes on and on.

Notes for September gardeners

The first chores of autumn include attention to turf, bulbs, transplants and, of course, weeds

First weekend

Lawn lifter. In many metropolitan and suburban areas, the sodded lawn, as opposed to the seeded one, is gaining ground. More householders than ever are apparently willing to make the higher initial investment required to build a lawn of nursery-grown turf. Instant grass—the appeal is hard to resist. But one curious concomitant of the sodded lawn seems to be the occasional problem of the first mowing. Healthy sods, laid on a good bed and watered faithfully, may well produce a good deal of new top growth before the roots strike down. And when a rotary mower is used—particularly one of the newer models that exerts a powerful vacuum effect because of the design of the blades, the housing, or both -a newly set patch of sod may lift clean off the earth and be ground to bits. (Once the grass roots have become reasonably well established in the underlying earth, such lifting is virtually impossible.) The solution with newly laid sods is twofold: first, wait a few days before the first mowing. No harm will be done to the grass. Second, use a reel-type mower rather than a rotary. Even the old standby hand-push mower that you have been saving for emergencies would be adequate to the task, at least for the few weeks it might take the sod to put anchor roots well down.

With seeded lawn areas, sown in autumn, young grass is as well whacked off with a rotary as any other kind of mower. But some reels that are out of adjustment will pinch and yank young grass clumps as cavalierly as the rotaries may lift a sod.

Apart from new lawns, which should have all the encouragement they can get, most garden plants should be allowed to slow down and consolidate their gains. (If plants do not rest in autumn, they may be vulnerable to frost.) This means, for most of them, only moderate watering and no fertilizer at all from now until after the first frost. Then a slow-acting fertilizer may be applied to wait for spring.

Second weekend

Companionate bulbs. A new way to plant spring bulbs must surely rank right alongside that better mouse trap as a goal of human ingenuity. But is there already a new way? After you have read about the Rabo rock-ledge bulb garden on pages 180 and 181, try this idea on for size: not only drift your varieties when you plant, but plant one kind of bulb over and among another kind. This double-decker system has distinct possibilities for enhancing an effect of informality and pleasant crowding that so often is the secret of a really successful spring bulb show. This does not, of course, mean that tulips should be planted in a layer above daffodils, for example, but rather among them—with one kind having a clear quantitative margin over the other. It also means that one entire layer of tulips or narcissi can be topped by another entire layer a few inches above with scillas, puschkinias, chionodoxas, and the rest. No bulb will ever pierce another from below, and none on top will much hinder the growth of one beneath it. One flower stalk may come up and blossom immediately adjacent to the stem of a wholly different species—but that, of course, is part of the whole idea.

We have seen the results of this kind of planting, or a modification of it, and can endorse it heartily. But always bear in mind that the idea is adaptable only to deliberately informal plantings; the traditional one-variety, one-color planting bed should never be handled in this ambivalent manner.

There are two principal ways to overplant bulbs in layers. One best suited to large areas and newly dug or constructed beds is by digging out the earth to the desired maximum depth, laying the excavation soil to one side, placing the deeper-set bulbs in position, then backfilling the bed to the proper depth for setting the second layer. Then the filling process is completed. The second method is simply to set the deeper bulbs singly with a trowel thrust: then before you have forgotten where you put the deep bulb, set the shallow one either on top of the first or to one side of it (being careful not to injure the deeper bulb with your trowel). Either way, this means that a double-nose daffodil bulb, or a standard tulip, will leave from 5 to 6 inches of earth below the finished bed level in which to plant smaller bulbs. (The little ones may need only 3 inches or so of this space.)

Third weekend

Close contact. All gardeners who transplant trees and shrubs as successfully in autumn as in spring invariably observe the cardinal rule: keep a tight rootball beneath your plant. The reason is not far to seek, because unless the feeding roots (often so fine and hairlike that the unskilled eye cannot even see them) are kept in close contact with the earth around them, the chain of nourishment, that is, of food and water movement, will be broken and the plant harmed or killed. In spring, the maintenance of a tight earth ball is perhaps slightly less important than in autumn, because the urge to make new roots is strong in all plants then. Yet many woody species, especially the evergreens, whose foliage must continue to use moisture as a concomitant of the life processes, depend even more in autumn than in spring on an unceasing supply of moisture from below.

If you buy new plants that have been raised in tin cans or pots, or that have been dug and balled in burlap by a conscientious and competent nurseryman, your problem will be virtually nonexistent. But if you are digging and moving plants from one place to another on your own grounds, then take all precautions. Dig deeply around your plants without shaking or cracking the earth ball about the roots: undercut the ball and make sure all long roots are cleanly severed before tilting the ball and pushing the half rolled burlap wrap under it; then when you have carefully tilted the plant (by the ball, not the top) the other way and drawn the burlap up, do a good wrapping job. Nor should you stop there. Insert a second and larger piece of burlap under the first (unless the earth ball weighs less than 50 pounds), and lift the whole business from the hole by using a hand at each corner of this lifting burlap. By a simple count, this will require four hands. The fact that four hands will require two backs may also be important, since slipped discs and other displacements are the lot of the overeager gardener who tries to lift too heavy a load alone.

Reading notice. House plant time is coming, and James Underwood Crockett's Foliage Plants for Indoor Gardening (Doubleday, $4.95) will provide you with a modest and useful vade mecum as you poke about the shops looking for windowsill and shelf candidates. There are a few good color pictures and many helpful facts and suggestions.

Fourth weekend

Weed burial. Some things you have to do every year, and in the same old way. With us, one of the same old ways that has always seemed good is the combined final earth turning and weed burial of the planted beds in the garden. The process, which consists simply of turning upside down with a shovel such exposed areas of the garden as can be dealt with without harming growing plants, brings up as much of the subsurface earth as you can lift or needs bringing up and buries whatever was on the surface down where the bottom of the load had been. Any surface weeds, annual or perennial, will be inverted and buried to form a sort of local compost.

PRIZE ROSES OF 1968

This year's All-America prize-winning trio of roses were developed in Europe. Two are from France, one from Holland

'Scarlet Knight' is a superior glowing red grandiflora. Vigorous and medium tall, the upright plants have rich bronze green foliage. Developed by the House of Meilland in France.

'Miss All-American Beauty' is a fragrant, clear pink hybrid tea. Grows 4 feet high with ivy green foliage. Also from Meilland.

Deep-rooted perennial weeds will live to rise again (curly dock, say), but you will, by decapitating and inverting them, make life less pleasant and survival more chancy. Best of all, perhaps, you will enhance aeration, make frost action more useful, where frost prevails in season, and generally store up the vital essences in the ground where a summer's compaction has tended to stratify and stagnate them.

The best tool for this kind of basically shallow spading (in planted beds you can scarcely dig deeper than 3 inches without risk of harming the roots of desirable perennials) is not a flat-blade nursery spade, which would admittedly make an almost level cut, but a round-point shovel. The great crook in the neck of such a tool makes a flat slice easy, and the rounded scoop blade seems to make digging and turning easier and consequently faster. One advantage of this special kind of cultivation is that all the vegetation presently living off your land is returned to it, together with the nutrients that supported it.

Book note. Consisting chiefly of photographs and captions, Tatsuo and Kiyoko Ishimoto's Art of Shaping Shrubs, Trees and Other Plants (Crown, $3.95) is a modest sleeper for gardeners who enjoy the byways of horticulture. The title, which is almost as big as the whole book, is apt. This is not a guide to creating topiary or a treatise on pruning. But it suggests at least a group of examples of the ways—sometimes antic, sometimes merely lovely—plants may express a special kind of art.

I've been trying out a new bathroom cleaner some friends told me about and I'm very pleased with the results. The stuff is so easy to use. You just spray it on and wipe it off, and it's good for all the many jobs that have to be done in a bathroom—cleans and shines the porcelain, polishes the chrome, deodorizes. My friends say they also use it at their cottage at the beach to check mildew. Dow Bathroom Cleaner is the name.

For years I fought a losing battle with refrigerated bacon. Every time I tried to get it out of its sealed container and put a few strips into the skillet, some of them tore. I was determined to find a way around this—and finally I have. Now, before I put a new package of bacon away in the refrigerator, I peel off enough slices for one breakfast, spread them side by side on a piece of aluminum foil, and repeat the process until the package is all used up. Then I stack the sheets of foil plus bacon, and cover the pile with a large sheet of foil. Since bacon doesn't stick to foil, I can slip off the top sheet when I'm ready to use it and the slices peel off easily.

The other night we visited a friend who lives in an old barn loft that has been made into a wonderful studio-apartment. I marveled at the high-beamed ceiling and wondered aloud how she managed to clean way up there. The answer was so simple: she had bought herself an extra pair of wands for her canister vacuum cleaner and when she wants to clean the high corners and beams, she just hooks all four of her wands together, attaches the wall brush, and goes to work.

Clothes that are fresh out of the dryer are much easier to smooth and fold than those that are tossed into a laundry basket to await sorting and ironing. The trick is to know just when they are ready and not to waste your time running to the laundry to check up. I get around this by the simple expedient of carrying my kitchen timer with me. Makes me sound a bit like a walking time bomb, but it lets me turn my undistracted attention to something else.

STALKING THE INDIGENOUS CRAFT

Traveling Americans are returning from distant shores with the realization that America's crafts and craftsmen can more than hold their own with any in the world. Some of the best places to see and purchase the pick of our native pottery, sculptures, weavings, and jewelry are at the many craft fairs held at this time of year. Among the noteworthy are:

ARKANSAS:
Prairie Grove: Clothesline Fair, Battlefield Park, Sept. 2-4.

ILLINOIS:
Rockford: Greenwich Village Fair, at Burpee Art Gallery, Sept. 17.

IOWA:
Davenport: Beaux Art Fund Committee Art Fair, Municipal Art Gallery, Sept. 16-17.

NEW HAMPSHIRE:
Sharon: Members' Exhibition, Arts Center, Aug. 30-Sept. 13.

NEW MEXICO:
Albuquerque: Southwest Ecclesiastical Arts and Crafts, University of New Mexico, Sept. 10-30.
Santa Fe: Southwestern Craftsmen's Competition-Exhibition, Museum of International Folk Art; through Sept. 24.

NEW YORK:
Stony Brook: "Crafts Image '67," Suffolk Museum, through Sept. 17.
Woodstock: All-media exhibition at Guild Gallery, Sept. 29-Oct. 28.

Many museum shops are becoming miniature craft fairs. In Washington, D. C., The Smithsonian Museum of Natural History's new shop offers a treasure trove of shells, butterflies, and beetles (the crawly kind); toys from 10c to $2; Eskimo carvings; Kachina dolls from the Southwest; dance masks—originals only and mostly one of a kind.

OCTOBER, 1967

VOL. 132 NO. 4

GEORGE Y

On the cover: In this year of the individual, a year of multiple options, a distinguished contemporary glass-and-brick house does not necessarily dictate modern furniture. These days, nothing but your own spiritual and esthetic needs dictates anything so personal as decoration. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Hennessey, Jr., wanted the vast living room of their Connecticut house to be a warm, personal, inviting, practical meeting place for themselves, their daughter, and their five young sons. The result: a living room that is particularly engaging for its curves, soft textures, and warm colors. Three zinnia-hued sofas, one of them boldly backed against a glass wall, are grouped with a great armchair to form an inviting quadrangle around a Korean table upholstered in lacquered canework, wonderful in texture. Stepping up the snugness, a draped table and a Moroccan rug shaggy as they come complete the unexpected charm of a latter-day house with a traditional heart. Architect, Philip Johnson; interior design, McMillen, Inc.

E MAGEE CARPET COMPANY, BLOOMSBURG, PA.

How come everything that's the same color isn't the same color? For example, every carpet maker makes an olive carpet. And you know what? They're all different. That's what makes our master dye-master a master.

He knows that every carpet has to look as great in your home as it does in the store. (There it has to look great.)

So our olive has to be your olive. Not too red. Or too yellow. Or too brown. And it has to stay that way.

That takes an awful lot of human know-how. You see, we can't trust machines completely. After all, how can you build taste into one?

We learned everything we know by making carpet, and nothing else, for more than 75 years.

It's something you should think about. Because there's more to a carpet color than meets your eye.

Our Kid Finish papers—and our Satin and Silk Laid—are telling of individual tastes. Each is made to feel as luxurious as its name implies.
They are unusual papers, because we make them in an unusual way. We add the lovely touch to stock that's made of 100% rag fibers. And we embed the Crane watermark because we don't want to keep our talent a secret.
For ideas in papers that express your individuality, beautifully, visit your Crane dealer. FOR PEOPLE WITH THEIR FEET ON THE GROUND.

The McCutchen's have seven children. Ages: 1 to 11. ☐ With a houseful like that, you think carefully about what kind of carpet to put down. And the McCutchen's did. Finally they chose World. Why World? Because World has a reputation for making carpet to live with—not just to look at. ☐ Not that Bosa Nova (made of 100% Enka continuous filament nylon and certified for commercial use) isn't beautiful. It is. But that's only one of its virtues. ☐ So far as the McCutchen's are concerned its major attraction is its extraordinary sturdiness. With seven little ones playing hob all over the house, it has to be. ☐ Resistance to stains and spills is important, too. Here again, the McCutchen's are lucky. Bosa Nova takes them in stride. A quick wipe and they're gone. ☐ Maintenance? Minimal. According to Mary McCutchen it takes a lot less time to vacuum than it did to wash and wax her floors. ☐ Does Bosa Nova cost an arm and a leg? Hardly. Francis McCutchen isn't the kind of man who'd go in over his head to put carpet underfoot. WORLD CARPETS

When we hold a preview we invite 1500 critics.

Each time we design a new pattern, Bill Wallace leaves home.

Bill's in Market Research, and he wants to know how the world's going to like our baby. So he checks . . . with women of all ages, all incomes, all over the country.

Bill's so fair it hurts. Empress, for example, he tested in a group of 24 patterns, including many from the competition. His critics got no clues; only questions. Which did they want most? Which least?

More of the ladies wanted Empress than any other pattern. But if they hadn't . . . if enough of them had panned it . . . we'd have chucked it. With a twinge, we admit; it takes months to worry a pattern into being.

We figure 1500 critics like you can't all be wrong.

What makes Empress lovely is its serenity, a kind of simple elegance. But what makes it lovely longer is this: in producing DeepSilver, we open a well in the backs of the pieces you use most, right where the wear is heaviest. We drop in an extra block of sterling. And then we plate with more pure silver than any other leading silverplate.

After that, we feel secure enough to say, "If any piece of DeepSilver fails to give satisfactory service with normal use and care, during your lifetime, we will resilver it at no charge."

This is what makes DeepSilver worthy of our Maker's Mark. And if you've learned one thing from us, you've learned to look for the IS mark when you shop.

Empress, $100 the 48-piece service for 8.

THE EXPERTS BREAK THE RULES

The experts broke away from the hum-drum this year. Eight designers turned the taboos topsy-turvy and came up with Rulebreakers, Room Service '68. They took a bold, no-holds-barred approach. And filled their rooms with bright, unexpected ideas using fabrics and carpeting made with Celanese fibers. They used Celanese Acetate for lavish color, lush texture, rich design.

Celanese Fortrel polyester for easy-care and lasting beauty. And to add even more excitement—Devoe paints for fresh, fabulous color. It's exciting when the experts break the rules. Or when you do. Before you try it, though, play it safe. Go to your nearest Rulebreaker store. (You'll find them listed at the end of this section.) See the imaginative Rulebreaker fabrics and displays. Talk to your store's decorating experts. Pick up the free Celanese Room Service '68 decorating booklet. Or send for one at Celanese Room Service, 522 Fifth Ave., N.Y., N.Y. 10036. You'll be on your way to imaginative decorating. And ready to join us in shouting: Down with dullness. Start your imagination spinning with the next eight pages.

Rulebreaker No.1:

Thomas Berry points out the limitless possibilities of a limited color scheme. Never have low-key colors been so dramatic: the hushed tones of ivory, greengage, whisper beige, Turkish taffy, brass and bronze. Held together with white. Accented by black. This exciting living room is especially designed for those areas where intense, natural light makes the subtle hues even more exciting. Muted colors stand up to strong sunlight, thanks to Fortrel polyester. And Celanese Acetate gives even the tenderest colors richness of tone and texture. Berry loves the texture of carpet and even puts it on the wall. Not just as a decorating whim but as an accoustical barrier. Celanese says: Now it's your turn to liven up the living room by limiting color but not your imagination.

Those luscious fabrics are Georgia Company's antique satin of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Georgia Company's sheer of 100% Fortrel polyester; Quaker's fabric woven of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Virginia Mill's damask of rayon and Celanese Acetate; John Wolf's antique satin of rayon and Celanese Acetate. Sculptured area rug by Aldon, a blend of Fortrel polyester and nylon; broadloom by Dan River, made of 100% Fortrel polyester.

Rulebreaker No. 2:

Dorothy Baker Billings gathers rosebuds and all manner of other flowers into a beautiful bouquet. She doesn't stop with the traditional one accent color—she uses lots of them. It's a bright, bright idea for a teenager's bed and sitting room. The colors are sure to stay right-from-the-garden fresh and the fabrics and carpeting beautiful with fibers from Celanese. Mrs. Billings uses garden colors of grass and parrot green, azalea and petal pink, lagoon turquoise and white—all in ladylike textures. The mood is young and very happy. The surroundings are cozy and comfortable. Celanese says: Go color happy for a very happy girl's room.

Rulebreaker No. 3:

John Chesteen puts the large and small together to make this a room for both adults and children. He creates a hospitable yet formal library with the whole family in mind. He even combines a large print and plaid. The color is limited to deep foliage green accented by black and white alone. Textures are combined with a free hand and a free spirit: heavy textured wovens with antique satins, sheer batiste with a shag carpet. The total effect is a comfortable, curl-up-and-read atmosphere. The fabrics and carpeting all have a common bond; they're made with fibers from Celanese so they're rich and luxurious. The beauty is lasting, too. Celanese says: Everyone should enjoy a library; so think big...and think little, too.

Interesting textures, rich color and lasting beauty with Bloomcraft's antique satin of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Desley's antique satin of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Georgia Company's sheer of 100% Fortrel polyester; Quaker's fabric woven of a blend of rayon, Celanese Acetate and nylon. Rulebreaker No. 4:

Janean creates the live-in kitchen, the daily-living focal point for the whole family. This is a wide-open kitchen without the traditional kitchen "confiners" like unreachable overhead storage. It's a warm, friendly room. And the family can be in the same room without being underfoot when Mom whips up a meal. Janean carries out this warmth by using the "down-to-earth" colors—copper, burnished gold, nugget, terra cotta in nubby tweeds, hearthy plaid homespun and touch-tempting textures. Never have fabrics been made to feel so at home in a kitchen. That's the easy-care and beauty of Celanese fibers at work. Celanese says: Make your kitchen into a room where the whole family will love to gather.

Warm, happy fabrics are Quaker's rough woven fabric of Celanese Acetate and rayon; Somerset Mills' woven pattern of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Tilbury's casement fabric of cotton, Celanese Acetate and rayon. Shag carpet is by Wunda Weve, made of 100% Fortrel polyester.

Rulebreaker No. 5:

Mark Hampton isn't bound by the existing room architecture. He uses fabrics to add interesting architectural details and creates a dramatically unusual master bedroom. He softens the starkness of the modern furniture with fabric. And the grandeur of a Gothic Revival Bed becomes even grander with heavy white fabric columns trimmed in surf green. He lavishly drapes the interior walls but conceals the sliding glass doors with fabric screens. All that wonderful depth of color, that feeling of richness is enhanced by use of Celanese fibers. And Fortrel makes that lush shag carpet a beauty that's easily taken care of. Celanese says: A master bedroom should be masterly—with the authoritative use of fabrics.

Opulent fabrics are Quaker's blend of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Riverdale's combination of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Seneca's combination of rayon and Celanese Acetate. Antique satin fabric and bedspread made by Kenneth, a combination of rayon and Celanese Acetate. Shag carpeting is from Wunda Weve, made of 100% Fortrel polyester.

Rulebreaker No.6:

Theodore F. Hanson shakes up the dining room with a startling combination of Shaker style and contemporary mood. He violates the simplicity of the Shaker point of view using pattern and color galore. And comes up with a new way of thinking. Textures are lavishly used—sheer on the ceiling, the luxurious depth of Fortrel on the floor and flamestitch fabric on the walls. The dramatic area carpet becomes even more of a conversation piece when Hanson tacks it down with big brass tacks. A room this different demands superb taste in fabrics, like these blended with fibers from Celanese. Celanese says: Table talk is sure to be varied in a room this excitingly eclectic.

nteresting textures are Bloomcraft's antique satin of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Cohama's sheer of 100% ortrel polyester; Orinoka's blend of cotton, rayon, Celanese Acetate and other fibers; Quaker's heavy tweed f rayon, Celanese Acetate and cotton; Somerset's woven pattern of Celanese Acetate, rayon, and other fibers. extured random sheer carpet by Monarch made of 100% Fortrel polyester.

Rulebreaker No.7:

John H. Smith ignores the conventional single traffic pattern in this heterogeneous family room. And creates a room that's alive with enthusiasm. It caters to a family's varied interests. And even the colors and combination of textures are as different as the personalities and interests within one family. The room bubbles over with brazen colors that are sure to stay bold and bright, thanks to Celanese fibers. They're marvelously easy-care and stay in high spirits.

Celanese says: Capture your family's many-faceted personality in a family room with a lively look.

Friendly fabrics are Joan's tweed of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Orinoka's woven pattern of cotton, rayon, Celanese Acetate and other fibers; Quaker's flat wovens using rayon, Celanese Acetate and nylon; Spectrum's drapery print of rayon and Celanese Acetate; Tilbury's casement fabric, a blend of rayon, Celanese Acetate, cotton and nylon. J. Neil Stevens combines identical prints in two tone-on-tone color variations for paisley with pow. He adds extra power to this paisley punch with his fearless approach to the white family. Beautifully easy-care with fibers from Celanese. He proves neutrals can be elegant, warm and exciting. He takes a wide range of whites and their first cousins—the golds, apricots and warm browns. He dares to use white carpeting. And he adds even more interest with his never-fear use of texture—antique satin, sheers, rough wovens, and deep shag carpet. Celanese says: Two colors can be more exciting than one, when you pick a print.

arless fabrics are Cohama's sheer of 100% Fortrel polyester; Quaker's flat woven fabric, made of yon and Celanese Acetate; Seneca's antique satin, made of rayon and Celanese Acetate; John Wolf's antique tin, a combination of rayon and Celanese Acetate. Meet the Rulebreakers

Thomas R. Berry, AID, a member of one of the Southwest's outstanding decorating firms, operates in Midland and Fort Worth. Berry's deft use of the one-color look subtly accented with color and black and white is his decorating signature.

A young designer on the move, Mark Hampton of New York City recently opened his own decorating firm with top London decorator David Hicks as consultant. A staunch believer in drama by way of simplicity, he demands that rooms be easy-to-care-for as well as beautiful.

Dorothy Baker Billings, AID, is one of the South's best known interior designers, but her activities range far beyond those of her home ground of Charlotte, N.C. Never bound by decorating clichés, she has a sure hand with the unorthodox.

Theodore F. Hanson of Minneapolis, is associated with one of that city's finest interior design firms. His all-purpose dining room is just one example of Mr. Hanson's very creative decorating know-how and flair for the unusual.

John Chesteen, a lively designer from Cincinnati, Ohio, shows that he's a family man at heart. He is a strong believer that children should be seen and heard. His comfortable family library accommodates both children and adults beautifully.

John H. Smith, AID, a versatile Los Angeles designer whose decorating chores range from a fabulous house for a client's dog to a French manor house, prides himself on being a natural rulebreaker. The results are always lively and liveable.

Janean, AID, of San Francisco, one of the country's foremost kitchen designers, combines both functional and aesthetic aspects in her warm, friendly kitchens. Her contributions in private residential and tract development housing have made her an important leader in this field.

J. Neil Stevens, NSID, lives in Chicago's picturesque Old Town. He delights in blending conventional and unconventional elements in decorating. His eclectic room settings are always distinctive, always inviting.
